Preface.

If one short volume could comprise
All that is witty learned and wise,
How would it be esteemed and read!—Swift.

Since the time when Cadmus "or whoever it was that invented books," in presenting his volume to the reading public, saw fit in the beginning of his work to call the attention of the world to himself as the inventor of this new method of imposing on suffering humanity, it has been the custom of every author whether of an almanac or of a Cherokee Dictionary, to inflict upon his readers an account of the reasons that drove him to issue his volume and the trials attendant upon its issue. The Editors of the PANDORA would gladly omit any such a feature from their publication, but such a departure from the universal custom of mankind would not fail to bring down upon us the censure of all the devotees of the common sense philosophy.

An account of the trials, vicissitudes and misfortunes through which we have struggled, until at last we are able to present our book to you, it is needless to attempt; for neither space nor the patience of the reader will permit: suffice it to say that more than once the obstacles seemed insurmountable and despair almost overwhelmed the Editors. Such matters as the loss of an Editor-in-Chief in the very midst of the work, and the seeming utter impossibility of being able to obtain a firm financial footing, are examples of the difficulties with which we have had to contend. By dint of much labor we have been able to overcome them all, and are here to make our bow. The Non-Fraternity Club has aided us through all, and their editor has been of great service.

If you have taken up this volume thinking to gain from it an idea of the courses of study pursued in the various departments of the University, of the methods of instruction employed, of the standing of the men in their classes, and of the general excellence of our college as an institution of learning, we should advise you to lay it down without reading it, for you are destined to be disappointed. We would respectfully refer you to the catalogue, where you can gain information in plenty upon these points. This is not in our line. Our purpose has been to portray the life of the student.

Our picture is necessarily a caricature, for on this point also custom is inexorable, and demands that we be witty, though we be not 'learned and wise.' Yet we do not deem it necessary to apologize here to those whom we have thus been forced to paint in glaring colors, if they are not true colors, it is their fault and that of the world that laughs at them. We have tried to bow to the "universal opinion of mankind," and in the deepest sorrow and sympathy with those who are thus esteemed, we have shown what they appear to the college world. So if you don’t like what we have said of you, go attack the college at large; we are but a looking glass that reflects its sentiments. We disclaim all responsibility for everything in this book and will not fight.

Dedication.

Full many a year has Georgia's college stood
The first among the institutions of the State,
The fittest trainer of her growing youth,
In all that to the intellect pertains.
The lessons that their Alma Mater taught
Her sons have ever turned to good account;
And now within the legislative halls
Those who have gone from out her doors,
Control the fortunes of the commonwealth.
Despising not the glories won for her
By those who thus upheld her fame;
In contests where the might of mind was felt,
And often learning turned the wordy battle's tide,
Nor yet unmindful of the worth of those
Who while in college did devote themselves
To study and the search for learning deep,
Lay we our tribute at the feet of those Whose victories in another sphere were won,
The spirit of the new the age has seized,
And we must bow before the customs new—
A body sound as well as cultured mind
Is what the world does now demand.
To you our canvas armored foot-ball knights,
Heroes of fiercest battles fought and won.
Who from the place where all unknown it stood,
Did raise our college to where now it stands
The first in sports that make the manly man
Of all the institutions in this State,
Or in the land of fighting Tillmanites;
Who did on many a hard fought field
Uphold our colors 'gainst the fierce attacks
Of mighty men of muscle, bone and brawn,
And did in triumph place the Red and Black
Above the ensign of your ancient foe,
And made the unknown quantity well known
To rivals who did learn your might too late;
To trainer, captain, players, subs and all
Who made up that great winning foot-ball team
We dedicate this book that feebly tells
Of glorious history you have helped to make.

The Reports Concerning the University.

The war against the State University still continues. Through the pulpit and the press bigoted prelates and selfish sectarians fiercely attack this grand old institution. Each year there is an outcry raised against the payment by the State of its just debt to the trustees of the University; and not satisfied with curtailing the appropriations so sadly needed by our college, her rivals whine like jealous children because, forsooth, the State refuses to tax its own property.

Nor are these the only methods of attack to which our enemies resort. There are others, more insidious yet productive of quite as much harm to the interests of the University. Acting upon the old adage "give a dog a bad name and hang him," those who wish the University ill and are able to control a newspaper are doing their best to hang our college. These harpies have cast slime and filth upon its good name. Under their treatment mole-hills have become mountains; youthful indiscretions have been magnified into crimes against law and decency; the manifestations of the exuberance of animal spirits have been portrayed as evidences of the most degraded state of morality: so that there are now throughout the State of Georgia a large number of people who believe that the University at Athens is a very hot-bed of vice, the home of the drunkard and the ruffian, where from one day's end to another students study nothing but plans for disturbing the peace and creating malicious mischief.

We do not profess to be better than the average of young men who are in attendance at colleges, yet we do believe that in justice we should not be considered below the average in morality. True, there may be among us some wild spirits, but where can you gather together between two and three hundred young men, that some will not be hard to restrain? We venture to say that we have no larger number of the unrestrainable than are in the colleges in whose behalf our Pharisaical enemies cast their stones.
True, we do engage in inter-collegiate athletic contests, yet no one recognizes more keenly than we do, the dangers of excess. Let those carping critics who attack us because we turn some part of our attention to manly sports, be silent until they have seen us fail in the sphere of the scholar. So soon as athletics shall have been seen to have interfered with the courses of study in the University, we believe they should be abolished or restricted. Yet, we do not think—for statistics show to the contrary—that athletics have been in any measure detrimental to the standing of the men on the teams, nor have they lowered the standard of the college as a whole.

In spite of the difficulty it experiences in obtaining money, the University of Georgia has a most efficient corps of professors, possesses well equipped laboratories and gives an opportunity for as high a course of study as almost any college in the South. Why is it then, that we find Georgia parents sending their sons outside of the State or to sectarian institutions, in preference to their own University? Is it because they believe the reports spread abroad concerning the State college? These have been for many years the weapon with which her enemies have stabbed the University in the back, yet we have only to point to the achievements of her alumni to prove conclusively the falsity of the statement as regards the unfitness of our college as a training school for young men. What other institution is the Alma Mater of so many of the rising young men of Georgia—not to speak of the distinguished older graduates? In every line of life they have attained distinction and are a recognized power in shaping the fortunes of the State. Yet they were brought up in the atmosphere which our enemies would have you believe is least fitted for the development of noble characters.

These evil reports must be stopped, it is the duty of every friend of the University to see that no more slurs be cast upon her fair name. We do not ask that truth be suppressed, but that justice be done.
The Senior.

The curtain falls on Ninety-five,
They'll tread these classic halls no more,
Their bark of life now sails away
Far from the dear old campus's shore.

With feelings wrought 'twixt pleasure bright
And sorrow dark, they bid adieu,
Amid the smiles there shines a tear,
For friends are parting good and true.

No more they'll hear the college yell
That echoed through the campus air;
No more they'll walk by L. C. I.
To gaze upon some fair one there.

Relentless time has swiftly flown,
Commencement day is here at last.
Farewell to books and hard exams,
They take their leave, the Senior class.

Good-bye we bid to all the Profs.,
Who here four years instructed us,
We know they'll never find a class
Who know so little how to "bust."

Farewell we say to all the boys,
From Freshman green to Junior wise,
May every one now follow us
And never, never miss a rise.

Four years ago as Freshmen green,
We entered at the U. of G.;
To tread the road of knowledge here,
That leads at last to a degree.

Commencement day has now arrived,
The chapel bell peals out once more.
A fond farewell to Ninety-five,
The curtain falls—our play is o'er.

History of Ninety-Five.

In the fall of 1890, there was seen wandering over the campus of the University of Georgia, a little band of Freshmen. Some of those Freshmen, too proud to enter the Freshman class, managed to work their way into the Sophomore. But by far the majority of them assembled together and formed the nucleus of the now renowned Class of Ninety-Five. From time to time this little class was augmented by the addition of a few more students to its original membership. The number of the members of the Class of Ninety Five reached its limit in Sophomore year. Its membership was then about thirty-six. But since then its number has been diminishing. Fate has so decreed it that some of the boys of Ninety-Five were called forth from college to play their part elsewhere. Some of them were forced by various causes to abandon their college studies for a short while, and consequently to honor some later class with their membership. The faces of three of the brightest of our number shall be seen on earth no more; early in their course, ere they had experienced the vicissitudes of college life, the cruel hand of death was laid on them, and their souls were wafted across the gulf of space into the "realms of the unknown." So great has been the reduction of members, that there are now only about twenty-eight. Notwithstanding this great loss in the number of the Class of Ninety-Five, the remaining boys have acted their part well.
In the recitation room the boys of Ninety-Five equalled, if not surpassed any of their predecessors. They showed themselves capacitated for mastering the greatest scientific and literary problems. So brilliant are their intellects and so studious have they been, that many are the pebbles which they have gathered from the vast shore of truth. In the halls of the literary societies their eloquent voices and their logical arguments are admired by all who hear them.

In athletics the class of Ninety-Five is also great. In its freshman year it furnished one of the members of the University foot-ball team. Since then many of its members have fought nobly on the gridiron to maintain the honor of the foot-ball team of the University of Georgia.

On the diamond they were still greater. When but freshmen they victoriously carried off the pennant; but since then fate has been against them, still they always held second or third place. Two years in succession the Class of Ninety-Five has given to the 'Varsity foot-ball team its captain.

And now the happy days of our college life have passed. Four years have been spent within the walls of the University of Georgia. How anxiously we have looked forward to the day on which shall be placed within our hands the long wanted "dip." But nearer and nearer came that day, the less and less we wished for it; for how true it is that the things that are the furtherest from our possession are the things we wish for most. And with the closing of our college days many a pleasure will end; but our course at college is over, and before us spreads wide the sea of life, on which we must sail our ship. Deep is that sea and boisterous are its billows, but the boys of Ninety-Five prepared themselves well at the University of Georgia, and they will safely steer their ship across life's boisterous sea; and when they will have reached yonder farther shore, each will anchor his ship in the harbor of eternal honor.
The Junior.

The Junior, oh! the Junior,
The best, the only class;
The Senior is conceited,
The Freshman is an ass,
The Sophomoric fellow,
His faults he cannot screen,
Is neither white nor yellow,
But simply, slightly green.

The Junior is perfection;
The Faculty’s delight,
He can cut cross-sections
Completely out of sight.
He’s long since cut Lucy Cobb,
And snows may come and go,
“Species of ice” at “town toughs,”
The Juniors never throw.

He never tricks, cuts nor crams;
Finals are his delight;
He goes to bed at nine p. m.
And sleeps the livelong night.
His drink is strickly H₂O,
Dispensary’s unknown;
He never speaks to Freshmen,
His “wild oats” are not sown.

He loves to woo the maidens,
And break their little hearts,
He is certain to accomplish
Whatever he once starts.
And so the festive Junior
Is worshipped all around.
He’s the pride of college
And just the toast of town.

“Too much magnifying of man or matter,” said Lord Bacon, “doth irritate contradiction and procure envy and scorn.” Thoroughly recognizing and appreciating this important truth, my purpose in writing a brief history of Ninety-Six is not to extol my class beyond the limits of reason, for that would encourage scorn; but rather to state facts upon which my readers may base their own conclusions. These facts, so numberless and illustrious, may produce envy on the part of other classes, but being facts, they cannot possible be creative of contradiction.

Ninety-six began its eventful struggle for knowledge in the fall of ’92, the faithful recruits numbering thirty-five. Our Freshman campaign was not indeed very eventful. However, we accomplished all that could have been expected of Freshmen—in the academic department, making a rise; in athletics becoming very proficient players of leap-frog, marbles, catch-me-if-you-can, etc.; in politics receiving very many honors—holding all the offices in our class.

Next year dignified “Sophs,” casting aside the mantle of “Freshness,” the pride of their mothers, the pets of the “lassies,”—in their minds, they entered upon the hardest and most trying campaign of the war. There were many well-fortified strongholds to be taken, the most important of which was Calculus and its several outworks. Hard and bravely did we fight. The difficulties encountered led some to desert; others fell bravely fighting; and still others being only wounded, entered the “University Hospital” during the summer, where, with proper stimulants and treatment, they finally recovered to enlist in our mighty army the following fall. This year by hard work and untiring zeal, we captured the baseball pennant; took a very prominent part in athletics, sporting, society, studying and—loafing, (and actually received all the Sophomore speakers and corporals’ places.)

The following year the battlements of science loomed up before us, and we advanced to the siege. Slowly but surely the outposts were captured, and we have at least succeeded in planting our flag upon the citadel itself. In Physics we have learned why a rock falls to the ground instead of dangling in mid-air, and are really in a fair way to discover the formula for perpetual motion. In Chemistry we have learned how to make \( \text{H}_2\text{S} \), that bane of Spring debates; have penetrated the workshop of the Creator and almost watched Him hook the cosmic atoms together. In Psychology we have learned to conceive the inconceivable, and such things as concepts and intuitions have become our everyday toys. In Biology we have learned how many rings are on an earthworm; how many joints in a crayfish; and hope in time to determine the exact amount of Simian blood in our veins. All this and more has yielded to our valiant attacks, and now, looking back over the conquered territory, strewn thick with the monuments of our victories, we cannot but weep because there is only one more world to conquer. Another pen will inscribe the history of that final campaign, and then indeed the Anabasis of Ninety-Six will have been completed.

Such in brief is the history of Ninety-Six. In a single year we shall be called from these pleasant scenes to others of a graver nature. Goethe, in his prologue to Faust, looks back with fondness to the days of his youth when he fought battles and wooed maidens; when he had nothing and yet had enough; when he yearned after knowledge and yet was happy in ignorance. But from this reverie the poet rises to remind us that to sweep with easy wanderings toward a self-appointed aim, is the task that maturer age imposes. After all, this is the great lesson to be learned. All life is not spent at college; beyond its classic walls lie the sterner conflicts of the world. To so live and labor here as to be able to grapple successfully with the difficulties that the future present is of a truth the sum of duties for us all. If we do this—if, while here, we work toward a self-appointed aim, letting all our aims be those of our God, our country and truth, then coming years will weave garments of honor for Ninety-Six, and its name, instead of growing dimmer, will become brighter “with the process of the suns.” In any event, however, whether success crown our efforts or defeat be our humble portion,

When our college days are o'er,
When we are here to meet no more,
Let us in our memories cherish
Precious thoughts that ne'er shall perish,
Of the happy times at college
When with '96 we sought for knowledge.

CARL H. HOLDEN.
The Sophomore.

He monkeys with chemical Lab.,
And dabbles with Physics too,
And tries to show innocent Freshmen
What a smart little "Sophy" can do.

He goes to germans at night,
And fools all his best time away
On a charming young miss of thirty,
Then sprints down to chapel next day.

He will never pass by McGregor's,
For he and old Mc "don't speak,"
But he says "unprepared" to old Riley,
And then cuts college a week.

He stands 'round the corner all day,
And loafs at the 'Varsity Place
And tries to drink "Trilbys" and "Flashes,"
And pass in for checks his "slick face."

But he's fated to fail on his finals,
And his failing will cost him dear,
For our sporty and interesting Sophy
Will be in the same class next year.

“History,” says Macaulay, “is a compound of poetry and philosophy.” In one sense this remark is highly applicable to the history of a class in college, poetry and enthusiasm predominating during the first part, gravity and philosophy asserting themselves during the latter part. At first blush, the assertion that any poetry may be extracted from the drudgery of the Freshman and Sophomore years, would seem to be a “hard saying.” But the fact remains that these are pre-eminently years of rosy hopes and lofty ambitions. In spite of all the difficulties of “Analyt” and “Descript”—in spite of Botanical names and French verbs, youthful fancy still finds time to build air-castles, dream dreams and see visions. It is of this golden period, this first half of college life that the history of '97 relates.

We may be said to have reached the dividing line of our college course; hereafter a more serious mien will attach itself to us, and profounder subjects will invoke our attention. The year 1893 was an extraordinary one in many particulars. The World’s Fair, the financial depression, and other stirring events, combine to make it remarkable. Foremost among these was the birth of '97. Then it was that our class began its famous career, and although no heralds announced the coming event; although the heavens were not darkened, and neither signs nor wonders appeared on the face of the earth, no one doubts, at least no member of Ninety-Seven, that in coming years the historic muse will linger more fondly over the deeds of Ninety-Seven’s illustrious members than upon all other events of 1893 combined.

Forty-five men began to ascend the rugged heights of learning under the banners of Ninety-Seven. Even in our Freshman year, a few looked with longing upon the greener pastures below, and returned to revel among the blissful jungles of ignorance. But at the beginning of the Sophomore year, reinforcements joined us in our ascent and now sixty-six heroes with large hearts and happy countenances are “happy on the way.” Ours is by far the largest class in college, and if the reader will pardon the chestnut, not only abundant quantity, but splendid quality is to be found within our ranks. In every department of college life we have borne “blushing honors thick upon us.” On the gridiron, four of the eleven canvas back heroes that caused the Red and Black to wave so many times upon the breezes of victory last fall, were proud to call themselves members of Ninety-Seven. In the Demosthenian and Phi Kappa halls, audiences hang breathless upon the words that fall from Ninety-Seven’s eloquent lips. In politics we are on the inside of every deal and our class elections resemble pandemonium. In journalism, four of Ninety-Seven’s facile pens made the pages of the Red and Black fairly sparkle. In society, we more than hold our own, vieing with the lordly seniors in the grace with which we twirl our canes and walk by Lucy Cobb. In the Thalians and Glee Club, we may boast of several stars of the first magnitude, and Orpheus and Adeschylus would, we fancy, be ashamed, could they listen to the music or witness the acting of Ninety-Seven in the performances which these clubs present. Upon the whole, then, it will be seen that Ninety-Seven is a most remarkable class. And yet the half has not been told, other excellences too numerous to mention, and which the modesty of the present historian prevents him from entering. For it is far from his intention to magnify the achievements of his class. They do not need it; they stand on their own merits. Cromwell once said to a painter: “Paint me as I am.” In that spirit this historian has endeavored to narrate Ninety-Seven’s history. That history, it is true, does not abound in stirring deeds or epoch breaking events. But the reader must remember that we are still making history. Two years remain to us at college and beyond them lies the great world to which we are looking forward with so many expectations. Who knows what deed of epic splendor we may accomplish during all this time? To pierce the veil of future is not, however, within our power, but we may truthfully assert that although in the remaining years to be spent at college, philosophy may place its seal upon our lives and science may unfold its beauties to our delighted vision, yet we shall ever look back with fondness upon the time when as Freshmen and Sophomores we viewed the world through the rose-colored glasses of boyish enthusiasm.

Freshman Poem.

How can muse of Freshmen sing?
Surely, surely, everything,
That upon their doings bore,
Has been written o'er and o'er.

Shall we say their caps are loud,
That their souls are gay—not proud?
Guy them on their child-like ways,
And their manners like the jays?

Gags like these no longer go,
Freshmen never change, and so,
'Pon my word, there's not a thing,
Not a single thing to sing.

"Blessings on thee, little man,"
Freshman year is but a span.
In thy pate these precepts keep,
And thou'llst never learn to weep!

Rises come to those who wait,
Better "cut" than come in late;
Midnight oil will cost thee "mon."
Bootlick! and thy work is done.

Freeman Class History.

My classmates—nature's noblemen they are,
Unequalled heroes, men without a par—
Have chosen me as that high potentate,
Whose duty is a story to relate
Of all our actions, whether good or bad;
Of all our humors, whether gay or sad;
Of all our vices, if such faults we own;
Of all our virtues, whether small or larger grown.
The duty is a most stupendous task,
And so your pardon I must humbly ask
In case I fail, as I am apt to do,
To win your approbation or to woo
From you a "Bravo!" or some kindly sign,
That having done my best, I may resign
My office, which, though I am proud to hold,
And would not abdicate for Croesus' gold,
Is full of duties grave and grievous care,
And needs a talent blithe and debonaire.

Herodotus or terse Thucydides
Would find the task not wholly to their ease,
Or Tacitus, could one like he relate,
Would find it hard to write of '98;
For never, if my memory serves me well,
Since man by woman in the Garden fell,
Has there been such a class to tax the pen,
Or spur to ink the hand of gifted men.

Not by a microscope or vision keen
Could there be found within our eyes a beam,
Why need I then waste time and patience too,
Trying to tell of things we do not do?

We never drink, that is, to great excess,
Nor to our bosom greater vices press.
The glaring sins which stalk on every hand
Afflict no member of our chosen band.
To be concise, we are from vices free;
That is, as free as mortal man can be.

Accomplishments we all possess most rare;
With us, indeed, there are none to compare.
Sandow is strong but he would lose his fame
If he met one of us in any game.
Our muscles are like whip cords and so strong
That Sandow could not stand before us long;
And Corbett, he might fight when in his class,
But just let him meet one of us; Alas!
Poor chap! He'd soon be forced to hang his head
And sneak away and wish that he were dead.

What glorious deeds did we accomplish when
We met those brawny Auburn football men!
The U. of G., old Georgia's greatest pride,
Made Alabama's heroes take a "slide."
And what two men belonging to our team,
With nimble rushes on the hard fought green,
Did more to make our pennant wave in state,
Than Clarke and Snider of old '98?

Apollo with his curls and handsome face
Was quite a picture of fine, manly grace;
But there are men in '98 I know
Who wouldn't give old Phoebus half a show.

For instance Upshaw, he's a beauteous lad;
A smile from him would make e'en Venus glad.

And there are others I've no space to name
Whose faces merely would exalt their fame.

Some of our fellows have real "Trilby" feet,
While some Canova would be pleased to meet,
That he in marble might their forms enshrine
To shame his Venus with her form divine.

Aside from these fine gifts of outward grace,
In mental deeds we always set the pace.

No other class in all the course of time
E'er wrote it's hist'ry in such perfect rhyme.
No other class with such precocious speed
Flew through its "grinds" like swallows o'er a mead.

No other band from "Polly Mc." obtained
Such golden fact's by History explained;

Nor with our logarithmic "Uncle Dave"
Plunged down so deep in mathematics' wave.

The Sophs.—"wise fools," as "Zip" would write them down,

Have not the virtues that give us renown.

The Junior cads don't know as much as we,
Though they instead of one year studied three.

And the grave Seniors, proud of rank and place,
Are but slow seconds in our onward race.

Our virtues are acknowledged everywhere;
No talents ever known were half so rare
As those which everyone of us possess.

So why need I continue to confess
Our strength of body, character and mind,
When, search the world, our match you could not find.

Now there is nothing left for me to write
Except a few words on the glorious height
To which we all will climb, in future days,

When all great men will imitate our ways,
And try, like us, to wear with easy grace
The laurel wreath which Fame is sure to place
Upon our brows. That day is almost here.

E'en now I see the Goddess drawing near
To make of Weddington, a Cicero;
To make of Crittenden, a ladies' beau;
To place on Baxter's head a kingly crown,

That he may rule his tribe with great renown.

To make of Smart a Minister to Spain,
And Jones, a great inventor, to make rain.

Each man is sure some day to fill a place
Ahead of all the fellows of his race.

If any one should doubt what I relate,
Just keep an eye fixed on old '98,
And you'll confess, as you will have to do,
This little Freshman "knew a thing or two."

Oh! the lawyer of '95,
You can gamble he's alive,
Spouting Blackstone, he is simply out o' sight;
As a talker, he's a hummer,
He would make a noble drummer,
For his gall is something monumental, quite.

He's superior to the style,
And he wears an ancient tile
While his straying ringlets wander in the breeze;
He can "play pull" like a winner,
Make a speech or slay a dinner,
Split a bottle or a hair, with equal ease.

When his boning here is done,
He will leave us on the run,
Astarting on his quest for "dust" and fame;
With his fingers on his dip,
And his law books in his grip,
You'd better b'lieve he'll get there just the same.

"H."

History of the Law Class.

To crowd in the narrow compass of my allotted space its virtues and its victories is a task of no easy fulfillment, and were it my province to catalogue them completely here, I should shrink from so arduous a labor.

Right generously have we contributed to the history of the past collegiate year, and though we leave behind us on the campus no engraved stone, or ceremoniously planted tree, to court the remembrance of succeeding classes, yet a record of such brilliancy must long survive our departure.

We began the session with the reduced and inauspicious enrollment of thirteen, but by many valuable accessions were soon increased to twenty-three.

In the lecture room we have exhibited a degree of proficiency that is rarely reached, and our every grasp of intricate legal principles has won us countless compliments. And, aside from the pleasant paragraphs of Broom and Blackstone, we have turned at times to the other fields of college life and enriched them with our work. Our representative on the University Football team contributed essentially to the glorious record with which it closed the season. In many a warm contest on Georgia soil their superior excellence was displayed and their "weighty" influence felt; and from the gridiron of Carolina, too, they returned crowned with their full share of laurels and possessed of more than their quota of "spoons."

In the literary societies our men have felt an abiding interest, and have filled worthily and well the highest offices in their bestowal. The eloquence of a lawyer won the anniversarianship of Phi Kappa over an array of strong competitors, and probably the society in all the long years of its existence was never more ably represented than on its last natal day.

Though the field of journalism is somewhat circumscribed here, and the "liberty of the press" a little bit restrained, yet many of our men have risen superior to these circumstances and shown themselves to be writers of unusual versatility. The columns of the Red and Black have frequently attested the potency of our pens, and under the present able direction of a lawyer, that same estimable sheet continues in a state of well-merited prosperity.

The Thalians have drawn largely on our dramatic talent, and in every other phase of student life the law class of Ninety-Five has proven itself facile princeps. Apt scholars in the classroom, active in the athletic field, eloquent and ready in the debate.

Mens sana in corpore sano most fitly describes us.

A brief analysis of the class will reveal a remarkable composition. That ten of our men should be college graduates shows in itself that our intellectual standard is high. Among our number there is a Justice of the Peace, who, for a brief period in each month has left the halls of learning for the hills of Habersham, where he has administered with distinguished ability the duties of that office. We have a member of the Georgia legislature, and while saturating him with legal lore, have not let the occasion escape us of impressing on his mind the need of his prospective Alma Mater. We have a “Populist” fly in our precious ointment—mentioned here rather as a curiosity than in pride, realizing that, like the fated bison on the western plains, this peculiar genus of political faith is experiencing a swift declension. We have the two largest men in college, and the oldest man; we will graduate the youngest lawyer at the Georgia bar.

While the above enumerated facts clearly prove that our attainments are diversified, they by no means justify our being characterized as “The Old Curiosity Shop”—a slander traceable, we rather think, to those who are covetous of their neighbor’s fame.

To perform the full measure of our duty has been our loftiest endeavor, and after a year pleasurably and profitably spent, we leave the institution of our love, having won from our own consciences, and “those in authority over us”—the sanctioning plaudit, “well done.”

And armed and equipped from the rich arsenal of our Alma Mater, we welcome the fiercer struggle of the future. If the past is an index of any accuracy the issue of that conflict is already decided, and it requires no anointed prophet to proclaim that the lapse of a few years will find the lawyers of Ninety-Five in high and honored places on the bench and at the bar.

Though Fortune may not always lend us the approval of her smiles, we won’t be discouraged or discomfited, for it’s the signalizing spirit of our class to be:

“Great ever in triumph or defeat,
Great always without aiming to be great.”

The Non-Fraternity Club.

At different times in past years the Non-Fraternity men of the University held meetings and kept minutes of such meetings, but on the 26th of November, 1894, they came together in a permanent organization known as the Non-Fraternity Club with twenty-six charter members. The club now has sixty members, holds regular meetings and intends to have, in the near future, a club room well furnished and supplied with newspapers and magazines where Non-Fraternity men may go and study or spend leisure hours in reading.

University Y. M. C. A. Work.

Of the many fields where professed Christians have opportunities to make practical applications of religious usefullness, probably none are of greater importance than our American institutions of learning. Where the characters of the nation’s law-makers are moulded; where those men are educated, who, in after years hold the positions of influence and importance in every branch of work—there would it seem that the greatest effort should be exerted to elevate and purify character. Some of the greatest men of the nation have gone out from our own halls here at the University. Who can tell but that their careers were shaped right here in college?

If the Christian men in the University would become aroused to a realization of their opportunities to do good, and stir up things next year, the dormant spirit that seems to have enveloped so many, will disappear, and we would have a religious awakening, such as has not been known in years.

The prospects for new quarters for the Y. M. C. A. in the lower floor of Phi Kappa are very bright, and it we can get enough spirit into the movement to have that room furnished, as Mr. Brockman says, “way up,” and make it inviting and cheerful, there’s no reason why a much better work shouldn’t be done. But even if we shouldn’t be so fortunate as to secure the new place, if everybody will just get together, shoulder to shoulder, and push right along with concentrated effort to win souls, it can’t but result in a great victory at the end.

We want to get a little true college spirit mixed into Y. M. C. A. work—just such as we have about foot-ball and athletics. So many fellows think that because we talk about “Religion” and things of that sort at Y. M. C. A. meetings, therefore it just must of necessity be dull and too serious for a lively sort of man to get into at all. But it isn’t that way. The meetings are not intended to make anyone long-faced and glum. The more lively the men are, the better will be the meeting. The loudest songs inspire the most cheerfulness.

As to this year’s work; we have had pleasant visits from Mr. Brockman, Mr. Gales, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Luce, of the Mission movement, and besides all these, the State Convention right here in our midst. Though all expected results from these sources have not been directly seen, it is believed that they each did good.

For ten weeks during the year, daily prayer-meetings have been held and this persistent effort to accomplish results is encouraging. It shows an earnestness in the work and an interest in its success.

We sincerely hope, however, that the work next year, beginning with the Fall Campaign, will have a greater amount of push and enthusiasm in it, than has been manifested in the past. F. J. O.

SYNOPSIS—ACT I.

Hamlet’s Room, Wittenburgh University.

“Nay, do not mock me, fellow-student, I think it was to see my mother’s wedding.”

ARGUMENT.

Hamlet is sad,
His ma would wed too soon and comes anon,
And scolds and growls and drinks too much. Hamlet’s dad
Appears in pomp and circumstance of spook,
To glut his ire and claim his throne.

Hamlet’s no cad.
‘Gainst hidden spies he draws his knightly blade,
Polonius thus comes to grief.

Hamlet is mad
In craft. Horatio and chorus then
Go mad at once from sympathy.

Hamlet is glad,
Ophelia’s his. The villian’s foiled. Once more
His father reigns, and all is well.

In introducing Athletics once again to the readers of the Pandora, we do so with a feeling of much satisfaction and pride. No previous year in the University can boast of as flourishing a year in this branch as the present.

To begin with we have remodeled our entire organization from beginning to end. Our Association Constitution has been revised and, thanks to the college spirit amongst the boys, the obliteration of politics in Athletics has been accomplished. Not only are the boys working solidly for the advancement of Athletics, but the Faculty too are behind us with good words of cheer. This they demonstrated by the appointment of a committee in that body for the general supervision of Athletics.

On the gridiron for the past season our record of victories is unprecedented. Early after the opening of the Fall session a coach and trainer was obtained, a good schedule of games was arranged and the team went to work with a determination to win. Out of the six games played only one was lost, that being the first of the series and played with Sewanee. The total number of points scored by the team during the season was one hundred and fifty-six, while the total scored by opposing teams amounted to twenty. Immediately after the close of the games the team selected their captain and manager for the coming season. Already the management has secured a trainer in the person of Glenn S. Warner, who captained and brought Cornell to its high standard last season. A good schedule of games is being arranged and the season of next term promises to be equally as glorious a one as last.

The series of class base ball games was up to its usual high standard. The Junior Class was the winner of the pennant, but all the classes played well. After this series the 'Varsity nine commenced to be organized, and already the team bids fair to mark the season with victories, though only one game has been played, besides a practice game with the Atlanta League team, up to the time of going to press. The game with Atlanta was a good showing, while the first regular game with Madison resulted in a victory. Other games have been arranged to be played before Commencement. Of track Athletics Pandora can give no definite account. Field Day, which should have taken place in April, was postponed on account of continued inclement weather until the 14th of May, but judging from the number of contestants it will be up to date. Track Athletics in the future will be made even more popular than heretofore in the University. A definite organization for such is now incorporated in our Constitution, and next year will materialize a team which will be able to cope with other colleges just as we now do in foot ball and base ball.

The incorporation of Tennis under the general Athletic Association is also a new feature, and already plans are being perfected for the laying of courts on the campus for the use of any and all members of the Association. With this short introduction to Athletics Pandora closes for the year '95.

A Tragedy in Four Acts.

ACT I.
On the porch before the Lucy,
   Long have stood two iron goats,
Famed alike in song and glory,
   Gathering yearly added glory
From the colors black and gory
   Which the students paint their coats.

ACT II.
When the darkness shrouds the city,
   Then the Freshman does attack,
Arms himself with paint and brushes,
   O'er his eyes a soft hat crushes,
Up the steps of Lucy rushes,—
   And the goats are Red and Black.

ACT III.
But the goats are not defenceless;
   From among the distant hills,
With a force that's truly crushing
   Comes a mighty Eagle rushing
All the mirth of students hushing,
   Every heart with fear it fills.

ACT IV.
Tis an awful time for Georgia,
   From the bird her sons have fled,
But the valiant Ryals turning
   Fights the eagle with his learning,
From his come words so burning
   That the Eagle soon is dead.
Ye who love a nation’s legends,
Love the ballads of the Students,
That like voices from afar off,
Call to us to pause and listen,
Hearken to this Indian Legend,
To this song of Druggistatha.

It was an evening of the winter.
Oh, the long and cruel winter!
And those buried in their wigwams,
Heard without the rustling branches,
Heard the bounding of the boxes,
Heard the rattling of the wagon,
Creaked and groaned and split asunder.
"Students," cried they. "Those are Students,
They are gathering in their firewood."
For they'd come from cross the water,
'Cross the laughing, wide Savannah,
Had beat the proud Columbiana
In the land of Carolina.

In his lodge quite sad and lonely,
Sat the pale-face Druggistatha
Dreaming of his Minnehaha,
Of his lovely Laughing Water,
Who for years had stood without there,
Offering free his choice Havanas,

Never dreaming of the Students,
Noisy, dancing, prancing Students.
But at night a fire was kindled,
On the lonely campus lighted.
Near to the midnight, Druggistatha,
Ever wakeful, ever watchful,
In his wigwam dimly lighted
By the glimmering, flickering, firelight,
Heard a shouting oft repeated,
Heard a yelling as of vict’ry.
From his chair rose Druggistatha,
Pushed aside the deer-skin curtain,
Saw the students and their shadows
Moving 'round beneath the arc light,
Laying hands upon his darling,
Stealing 'way with Laughing Water;
Stood and watched them from the window.
"Farewell," cried he, "Minnehaha,
Farewell, O, my Laughing Water,
All my heart is buried with you,
All my thoughts go onward with you."
And the strong man shook and trembled,
In his tattered white-skin wrapper.

As the coals grew white as ashes
And the fire was slowly dying,
From his sleepless bed uprising,
Druggistatha saw it dying,
Flickering, glimmering, glowing, dying,
Stood and watched it from his door-way.
Sadly grieved now Druggistatha
Empty-handed, heavy hearted,
That they burned his Minnehaha.
But his mighty brain within him
Suggested ideas very weighty.

On the morrow, Druggistatha
Sought his old friend Mayor-Cita.
"If these hateful Students," said he,
"If these great outrageous fellows
Go on thus a little longer,
Stealing everything they wish to,
Rending everything to pieces,
Filling all the world with wonder,
What becomes of us Athenians?
Who will care for us Athenians?
They will tread us down like mushrooms."
All conspired 'gainst the Students,
The audacious, the over-bearing,
Heartless, haughty, dangerous Students.
So they gathered them together,
Gathered Freshmen from the soiree,
Gathered Sophs from "Oh Be Joyful,"
Gathered all of them together,
Lectured at them without mercy,
Threatened them with fines and prisons.
Nearly were they thusly conquered,
Ended were their wild adventures (?)
Ended were their tricks and gambols (?)
Ended all their craft and cunning (?)
Ended all their mischief making (?)

All their gamboling and their dancing (?)
All their wooing Minnehaha's (?)
And the wicked, wayward Students
To the pale-face humbly journeyed.
Spoke to him thus, their leading chief,
"Howdo, noble Druggistatha,
We have put you to the trial,
To the proof have put your patience,
By the insult of our thieving,
By the outrage of our actions."
Then in Druggistatha's bosom,
Spake the still small voice of Conscience,
And when later in the season
Students won such lasting vict'ries
In the great Atlanta city,
Druggistatha spoke up nobly,
"Let us hire a drum, Kee-Nadin,
And a fife or Weebago,
I will throw in fifteen dollars,
Fifteen hard-earned, well-earned dollars."
Thus did noble Druggistatha
Satisfy his qualms of conscience
Make his peace with College Students.

Let this teach a noble lesson
To the old men of the village,
All the warriors of Police-Force.
Let the peace-pipe quick be brought forth
And the calumet be smoked now.
Do not with the Students meddle,
Lest the Students give you trouble,
"Peace be with you Druggistatha,
Peace be with you and your people."

M. M. L.
A Parting Toast.

Away from college and campus, from scenes of labor and fun,
The Seniors soon will be leaving when their sheepskins they have won;
Full many regret their going, for their friends that remain are a host,
Then drink with me to the Senior, and this be our good bye toast:

In a loving cup o'er running,
    We pledge you one and all,
Success and plenty attend you,
    Wherever your lot may fall.
Here's to your health and happiness,
    May you never "bust" again;
Here's hoping, on the world's great Blue List,
    You'll all be honor men.

May fortune e'er befriend you,
    Adown life's winding way;
"God bless you, merry gentlemen,
    May nothing you dismay."

Great Expectations.

Sagely the student pulls his pipe,
    Half way 'twixt thought and dozing,
Dignity, born of wisdom ripe,
    On his brow, with grace reposing.
'Tis commencement time and exams are o'er,
    All care to the winds he's flinging,
And his musings turn to the year that's gone,
    Or the honors the next is bringing.
While the smoke wreaths blue the air perfume,
    His castles in Spain he's building,
And the smoke spirits kind their sway assume
    His dreams of the future gilding.
Now the smoke spirits kind anew begin,
    And tell him their welcome story,
Of all the honors he's bound to win,
    While he plans how to wear his glory.

L'ENVOI.

Next day a blue list to bits he's tearing,
    With anger in his eyes,
In keen chagrin he's deeply swearing,
    For he failed to make a rise.

"H."
The Senior to the Freshman.

Ye call me Senior; and ye do well to call him Senior who for four long years has drunk upon the campus every brand of wine or whiskey the full dispensary of Athens could furnish, and who never yet has had enough. If there be one among you who can say that ever on public Milledge or in private room, my actions did belie my tongue, let him stand forth and say it. If there be three in all your company dare face me around the beer keg, let them come on. And yet I was not always thus—a Senior at the University, a jag leader of innocent Freshmen. My early life ran quiet in the backwoods of Georgia; and, when at eve I had brought in the wood and we sat assembled around the fireside, my sire told me tales of his life at Athens; high ambition seized upon my soul and nothing cold do but I must be sent a Freshman thither.

To-day I told Zip I was sick on yesterday; and when I looked into his eyes, behold! doubt lurked there. He had seen me the previous afternoon, smiled diabolically, chuckled, and passed me by; the same smile to-day played upon his face that I had marked but yesterday when I passed him on the street. I told him that I had been sick during the forenoon, ay, sick unto death, and I begged that he might remove the absence, and I would come constantly in future. Yea, I besought him, while the Sophomores, but just come in, laughed in high glee, deeming it rare sport, forsooth, to see the proud Senior turn red with confusion before that satirical smile. And they crowded round disorderly, saying, "Let the absence stand, there are no truthful students but Sophs!" O Athens! Athens! Thou hast been a tender nurse to me. Thou hast given to that poor, gentle, timid, Freshman lad, who never knew a harsher tone than a bank note, a tongue of forkedness and a conscience of stone; taught him to steal boxes, barrels, and Indian maidens and burn them in a holocaust to Victory; to gaze in the glaring eyeballs of the Chancellor and answer "Unprepared," even as a Floyd upon the mayor. And, when he has attained to the dignity of a legislator from his native county, he shall pay thee back until thy coffers run over with gold and thy sons shall no longer sit on benches which are as hard as the heart of the Athens mayor.

J. H. BUTNER.
There came through the gate a poor exile from Yahoo,
The smell on his hot breath was surely of corn,
For a refuge he sighed as he fell in a guilty
And yielded his tromponents there 'till the morn.
But the old college arrested his eyes' roving motion
For there he had lived ere the Chancellor's notion
Had driven him forth, and tho' much on ocean,
He raised the bold yell "Ouf gee Yahoo, hurrah."

Sad is my fate, sighed the poor loaded student,
From copper and watchman I've nowhere to flee;
I now have no refuge when rashly imprudent,
In swiping a sign board, the police chase me,
Never again through the dark midnight hours
At the top of my voice shall I test my lung's powers,
And cover the chapel with paint thrown in showers,
Or break out a window, or pull up a tree.

Old Dormitory, though out in the city,
When "shot" I make straight for thy sheltering walls
But alas, in my room strangers greet me with pity,
And ask that I please raise less Cain in the halls.

O, cruel Doc., will you never replace me,
In this mansion of peace where no watchman can chase me.
Where steal what I may, no detective can trace me—
When dread of a sand bag, prevents them from calls.

O where are the mighty raids after our fuel?
Pay for a fire! No, zip paid for them all—
Banished I am by an edict too cruel;
Shall I to my buggy bed ne'er again crawl?
Oh, my old room all covered with papers,
Now I can see how her shapely waist tapers,
Aye, I see more as she's cutting her capers,
That actress that's pictured upon your old wall.

Where all of Boggs' admonitions ignoring,
Oft I engaged in a small game of "draw,"
Students now over recitations poring,
Which in my time there no man ever saw;
Silent and calm, in thy halls there's no sporting,
Green are thy inmates in all but exhorting,
And no longer sounds like a cannon's reporting,
Yahooite's yell, "Ouf gee Yahoo, hurrah."
"A pair of lips of ruby red,
A willing lass, a word unsaid,
And no one there to stop the bliss
That did then come—a stolen kiss.

A pair of boots, size number eight,
An angry pa comes through the gate,
And no one there to help the lad,
Out he is bounced! I'll swear that's bad.

The Flower’s Choice.

I stood on the campus at midnight,
That witching, delightful hour,
The stars shone out in the heavens bright
With a strange mysterious power.
I felt as if they were urging me
To backward glance o’er my life;
My mind from worldly thoughts was free,
From thoughts of toil and strife.

Then the trend of my thoughts was changed,
And from viewing displeasing facts,
I hopefully looked ahead in the way,
And planned most noble acts.
As I thought of my future life,
The idea dawned upon me,
That ‘twas a good time to select a wife;
There was given a choice of three.

I mused o’er the girl I left behind,
When off to college I came;
I knew from the glance of her true blue eyes,
And the tremor that shook her frame,
When we said “Good-bye” on the night before
I left for months so drear,
That she would always be true to me,
The charming, delightful dear.

And then I thought of my Athens girl,
Always cheery and bright;
Lighting up my college life,
With a joyous, charming light.

And then a vision came to me
Of a window high and small;
There my Lucy Cobb girl did sit
With the sweetest smile of them all.

And as I pondered doubtfully,
For I could not make a choice,
A happy thought came over me
And made my heart rejoice;
A Marechal-Neil shall be my judge,
And from Miss Puss’ vine
I plucked one, rich and yellow,
With perfume most divine.

The plan I devised was simple enough;
As each leaf I plucked apart,
I said one letter of the alphabet,
Years ago learned by heart;
As petal on petal fell at my feet,
My hopes began to fall.
Possibly the rose would not choose
To select for me after all.

As the leaves continued to fall,
My heart throbs came very slow,
The very last petal came out X,
Unknown quantity, you know.
And as I homeward wended my way
I could not but rejoice
That the rose postponed the dreary day
On which I must make my choice.

A man walking in the dark met a Creature with green eyes. "Ah, I know you, you are Jealousy," and he stabbed it. By day-light he discovered that he had slain his faithful house cat. Common sense serves us better than a knowledge of physiognomy.

An ambitious Wolf met an old Ram. "Now," thought the Wolf, "is my chance to get a sheepskin with very little trouble." But the exceeding toughness of the old Ram's hide gave him indigestion, whereof he long lay ill.

In acquiring knowledge exercise discrimination rather than voracity.

A gardener had a lily of purest white—but white lilies are common. So he painted it scarlet and sold it for a good price.

What we call Originality is often overdressed Imitation.

"Behold," says the Pessimist, "I have dived to the bottom of the sea of knowledge." "And come back covered with slime," added a bystander.

Said one to a critic: "Of what use are you? You plant nothing, you only destroy the work of others." "True," he replied, "but there must be someone to pull up the weeds."

A man who had breakfasted on bacon and spare-ribs was bitten by a rattlesnake and died. Soon after a wandering razor-back hog dined off the snake.

The compensations of nature, though perplexing, are complete.

A colony of rabbits seeking a king found a Chinese idol. "Behold," said they, "his impressive forehead and his wonderful silence. He is wise." So they made him their king. But as time went on and he spoke not, they became impatient and cast him away.

Taciturnity is no more an evidence of wisdom than ill-fitting clothes of a poetic soul.
Said the Weed to the Violet, "You have no business here, you are merely pretty. The soil should nourish the strong and the industrious."

But when the gardener pulled up the Weed, it became apparent that while beauty is only skin-deep it has the advantages.

There was a man once who had a dog; and, like some others, he always delighted to say that the dog was his best friend, and the only one wholly devoted and true to him. One day the dog went mad and bit the man, who then realized that it's not only intellects of a high order that are susceptible of mental distemper. But he died of hydrophobia all the same.

An eagle once sat in a dark and rayless chasm, and far above him he saw the sun diffusing light and warmth and cheer. And he spread his wings and soared up and up until his strength failed him, and when he realized that he could go no higher his heart sank and he fell to earth again. And in the fall his wings were shattered, and he could never again rise from the earth. But he had been as near to the sun as he could for all that.

And a robin who had seen him rise and fall, said: "Well, and what good is all that to him? Lofty ideals do not alone constitute nobility. He who dreams, and dreaming aspires however high, if he have not the power to perform, wherein is he any better than a balloon without gas? Or an unloaded sky-rocket?
I, even I, a poor robin, can still feed my young and migrate with my tribe when the seasons change, for I knew my limitations, while he is crushed forever."

An expert stenographer can always make money where a jack-leg lawyer will starve.
Out on Milledge.

A LUCY COBB IDYL.

To and fro on the avenue,
Walketh the student lover true;
Walketh upon the pavement there,
Smiling at maiden, charming, fair;
Standing there with such careless grace,
Wreathed in smiles is her girlish face.
Life seems all of a roseate hue,
To the student who walks on the avenue.

Standing there with such careless grace,
Wreathed in smiles is her girlish face.
What if Miss Millie frown and stare,
That is her "fellow" standing there.
Strolls she down the porch vine-clad,
Smiling sweetly! It seems so sad,
That she who should to her beau be true,
Should smile at that boy on the avenue!

L'envoi.

But 'twas ever thus! We all will rue
The days we walked on the avenue;
For fickle's their fancy, as false as their curls—
You'd better avoid them! The Lucy Cobb girls.

Spoons.
A Pathetic Drama in One Act.

Scene—Chancellor’s Office.

Enter students trembling.

Dr. Boggs (rising)—Young gentlemen, I have called this meeting to attend to an affair which has caused me much pain. I have a letter, which I wish to read (takes letter from desk) first of all—

Clinton, S. C., November 2, 1894.

W. E. Boggs, University of Georgia,

My Dear Mr. Boggs—Your foot ball club took dinner with me last Friday, en route to Columbia, and after they had left, I missed some of my silverware, and upon a close investigation I found that seven spoons and my only pickle fork were gone. Now, I never would have charged it to a foot ball team, but some drummers got off the train and one said he saw several of the men were wearing spoons on the lapel of their coats, and one young man—an extreme blonde, with a mustache, was wearing my pickle fork. Now, Mr. Boggs, I am a poor widow lady, and trying to make a living and I can’t afford to lose my silverware, and the object of this letter is to ask you please to get them for me by the 12th inst, or else I will have the whole club arrested, and you know I would dislike to do this. If they have not got the spoons, etc., they must pay me fifteen cents for each spoon and forty-five cents for the fork. I gave fifty cents for it at Squask’s Cross Roads, and am very much attached to it. Please see the crowd and write me immediately about this.

Yours in misery,
Abigail Snoops.

(Boggs, continuing)—“Young men, this letter astounded me. I could not believe my eyes—why if a man had come to my face and told me, “Your foot ball team is going around stealing spoons,” I would have said, “You lie,” (looking cockeyed) and yet I have it here on paper and from a woman. O, young gentlemen! Can this be true? What is going to become of the State when her most promising young men go around stealing spoons as souvenirs? Those are not souvenirs. If you want to obtain souvenirs honorably, let the two teams put up their colors as a trophy, and the winner take them. Did Ivanhoe steal spoons? No. When he challenged his enemy to come out and meet him, to pit science and strength against science and strength in a hand to hand encounter, and when he had unhorsed his opponent and left the field, did he go around stealing spoons? No, but the beautiful horse of his adversary was presented to him the next morning in token of admiration of his skill. Gentlemen, that was a souvenir gained in an honorable manner and not "hogged" from a widow lady. But, coming back to our own case— I will hear from any of you. (Sits down.)

Silence.

Boggs— "Is this going to be a Quaker meeting?"
Capt. Butler— "Doctor, I suppose it is my duty to speak first, as I had charge of the men on that trip. The spoons were taken, but I would like to say that I did not take one."

Boggs— "Well, young men, there were seven spoons and one pickle fork taken."
Fleming (meekly)— "Doctor, I took one spoon."
Dr. B.— "That's a man, Mr. Fleming, that's a man."
Snider— "I got one Doctor."
Dr. B.— "Mr. Snider."
Stubbs— "I have one spoon, Doctor."
Dr. B.— "Yes, I thought so."
Watkins— "Dr. Boggs, I took the pickle fork."
Dr. B.— "And you will be hanged as high as Haman for it."
Killorin— "One spoon, Doctor."
Dr. B.— "And thou too, O Chlorine."
Shackleford.— "I have one."
Dr. B.— "I am sorry, sir."
Nalley (apologetically)— "I took a spoon, Doctor, but I didn't know she was a widow lady—I always liked widow ladies, and—"

Dr. B.— "That will do, Mr. Nalley. Gentlemen, there is still one spoon missing, speak out, who ever has it. Mr. Kent, did you get it?"
Kent— "No sir-ree, Doctor, I'm a Christian man."
Dr. B.— "Well, gentlemen, there is still one spoon. Who has it?"
Fleming (with that grin)— "Doctor, since thinking this thing over, I believe I got TWO."
Dr. B.— "Well, Mr. Fleming, if you hit every hotel that heavy, I shall expect you to open up your stock some times soon.

Now, I believe that is all, young men. I shall lay your disgraceful conduct to the Faculty, and will communicate to you their decision on Wednesday afternoon. I'll not detain you longer."

Exit students with their coats dragging the ground. S.
To My Love.

Merry, wistful, dear Mistress Prue
Thou lovest me—well I know;
And sure my homage, my service true,
My love for thee must show.

O many's the time together we've played;
Love's lore oft to thee I've read;
And many a time together we've strayed
Where'er bright fancy has led.

Thou art content I know to abide,
In communion sweet with me;
Yet all thoughts of marriage I thrust aside,
For I know that may not be.

And thou art a maiden fair and true,
And I a lover bold—
Then why do I not for this small hand sue?
Thou art only five years old.

"H."

To Lora.

When first I saw thee, Lora,
'Twas on a fair spring day,
When Nature told in accents sweet,
Half that my heart would say.

For it told of love and beauty,
Of what thou wast to me;
It sung of all that is fair and good,
Of what I would be to thee.

It told of my soul's wild longing
To win thy faith and love;
It breathed the prayer my heart had sent
To the home of love, above.

But now the voices of the spring,
Bring naught but grief and pain;
But sighs for the bright and happy past,
That ne'er will come again.

Farewell, sweet maid of Athens,
Thy charms will ever be
A chain of bright and shining links,
That binds me fast to thee. R.
There, Little Boy, Don't Cry.

And all your troubles away will fly,
There little boy don’t cry, don’t cry.

There little boy don’t cry,
Your panties are torn I know;
But to turn pretty statues over is wrong,
And barbed wire fences are strong.

So leave them alone when you’re passing by,
There little boy don’t cry, don’t cry.

There little boy don’t cry,
You’ve lost your derby I know;
So you’d better stay in the house a spell,
(For in other head-gear you don’t look well).

And wait indoors 'till the clouds roll by.
There little boy don’t cry, don’t cry.

There little boy don’t cry,
They’ve got your popgun I know;
But you’d better be everlastingly glad
That you answered not that ad.

For Cran is longing your face to spy,
There little boy don’t cry, don’t cry.

"H."
There was a young man named "Cholly,"
Of Freshmen quite the most jolly;
As a Lucy Cobb sport,
The girls he did court—
This apostle of freshness and folly.

But this young apostle of folly
Seemed one day a little less jolly;
His very best girl
Her sweet smile did furl—
And hid it away from dear Cholly.

And our young friend called Cholly
Became extremely melancholy;
His very last cent
For jonquils he spent—
Thereby showing his folly.

But, alas! for our friend Cholly—
Our apostle of freshness and folly!
For his flowers so yellow
She thanked some other fellow!
And he became more melancholy.

And then our Freshman so jolly
Repented his very great folly;
Became pale and thin,
Believed study a sin—
And was straightway "busted" by Polly.
A Dream of the Lecture Room.

As I listen, calmly dozing,
To old Charby's lecture dry,
And think of happy moments
That long have drifted by;
There comes to me a vision
Of a maiden sweet and fair,
With eyes that beam upon me,
With a sad and pensive air.

And I think how in the gloaming,
When the sun had sunk to rest,
And had draped the sky in splendor
For its union with the West;
We would wander through the meadows,
Hand in hand and heart to heart,
And forgot the day of sorrow,
When our loving souls must part.

But, alas! That bright dream faded,
Long ago it passed away;
And I turn with heartfelt hatred
To the "problems" of the day.
And as I think of all I failed
To prepare, while I danced last night,
I hear old Charby sweetly say:
"Mister R—— will you recite?"

Memories.

My heart is sad and lone to-day,
For bygone thoughts come o'er me
Of many a scene, perchance 'twas gay.
Or perhaps as a ruffled sea.

When thought and memory hand in hand
Steal back to childhood's days;
Where gleeful hearts the breast expand
Beneath the sun's warm rays——
'Tis then I weep with tear dimmed eye
As I view the wide scene o'er,
And think of memories long gone by,
And a face I shall see no more.

Of a face I remember with smiling eyes,
So sweet, so calm and still,
That now with other loved ones lies
On the brow of the cold moist hill.

A marble shaft with ivy grown,
A loving tribute stands;
To a better world the soul has flown;
Life's run its golden sands.

But loving memory e'er shall bear
This spot in sacred trust;
And passing by I drop a tear
To mingle with the dust.
GRINDS
What Fools These Mortals Be!

In Chemistry Class—Dr. White: “Mr. Crane, what kind of a taste has this element?”
Crane—“It has a very fragrant taste, sir.”
Dr. White—“That’s exactly right, sir, (passing on to Osborne.) Mr. Osborne, what odor has this element?”
Osborne—“A very loud one, sir, and you can’t really detect the difference between the smell and odor of it.”

In Physics—Chaby: Mr. Cook, how do you find the specific of a solid by Farenheit’s Hydrometer?
Cook—“Well, sir, the first thing you do is to put the specific gravity in the pan and weigh it.”

Col. Charbonnier, to Junior Class—“Now gentlemen, you must make this distinction. When I say that the Barometer falls, I don’t mean to say that it falls down from the wall, or wherever it is suspended, but that the mercury in the Barometer falls.”

A Junior, at the rear of the class in a low tone—“Colonel, your point is well taken, we never would have thought of that.”

In History—Prof. McP.: “Mr. Boyd, what about the early discoveries of England?”
Boyd—“Doctor, I think the text fails to mention a man of that name.”
Prof. McP.—“Mr. Morton, from whom did William Penn obtain his grant of land in America?”
J. A. Morton—“From his heirs, sir.”

In the Law Class—Prof. Morris: “Mr. Lyon, how would you prove an inscription on a grave stone?”
Lonnie Lusher Lyon from Sope—“Bring the graveyard into court, sir.”

Law Student—“Schwarz, what is the difference between Haskell and Newell?”
Schwarz—“Haskell is a lunatic; Newell is an idiot; the former has lucid intervals, the latter has not.”

Professor Bocock’s Knack of Making Men Forget Simple Things—Mr. Pettis, (reading,) “They chose one man from each of the ten tribes.”

Prof. Bocock—“How many men did they choose, Mr. Pettis?”
Mr. Pettis—“I did know, Professor, but really I’ve forgotten.”
Bocock—“Are you guessing, or looking in the book?”
Carson—“Both, Professor.”

In the Lab.—Senior: “What are you doing Tom?”
Boggs—“I have dissolved a snake in nitric acid and I am trying to precipitate it with hydogen sulphide.”

Connally, (excitedly)—“Doctor, I—I—I’ve swallowed some hydrochloric acid.”
Dr. Hertly, (tranquilly)—“Oh don’t be alarmed, Mr. Connally, try the litmus test.”
Belcher—"Mr. Black, you may read."

Black, (translating In brevi tempore)—"In a short while."

Belcher—"But we can't wait."

Kemp, (translating "A. D. III Kalendas," in one of Cicero's letters)—"In the year of our Lord—

(laughter cuts him off.)

Harvey—"Professor, who wrote the dialects?"

Upshaw—"Professor, will you please tell me who wrote Ovid?"

Question on Polly's Final—"Tell me what you know of the following, Rosetta Stone, Charles V., etc."

Freshman's Answer—"Madame Rosetta Stone was a lady who lived in the time of Charlemagne, and was hung for putting out the Emperor of Russia's eyes."

Prof. Morris—"Mr. Johnson, will you tell us what is wrong with this sentence, "My father takes several magazines, Lippincott's, Century and Scribner's."

Johnson, '98—"Mistake in the use of words."

Prof. Morris—"What words are wrongly used?"

Johnson—"Oh, you shouldn't use foreign or newly coined words like Century, Lippincotts, Scribners."

Polly—"Mr. Upshaw, what can you tell us of the 'Golden Bull'?"

Upshaw—"Well, sir, he was the sire of the Golden Calf."

Ridley—"Mitchell, that word is not spelled that way in Webster's Dictionary."

Mitchell—"Well, I know it's right, for my dictionary gives it that way, and it's better authority than Webster's; mine's imported from France."

Y. M. C. A. Shark, to inebriated Freshman—"Ah, my friend, don't you know that your sin is sure to find you out?"

Inebriated Freshman—"'S alright 's long's Peggy don't."

Nisbet, (to young lady at the German)—"Oh, Miss B, I think you are the loveliest dancer in the room, it is a delight to waltz with you."

Young Lady—"I am so sorry I can't return the compliment."

Polly—"Was this battle fought in France?"

Ridley, '98—"No, sir, it was fought in Europe."

Freshman (passing Athenæum)—"This hotel doesn't seem to be doing much of a business."

Ham Sawes (to crowd)—"Good evening, gentlemen."

Dorsey—"Well, why don't you speak to me?"

A '95 law student received a fee of twenty-five cents for writing the following notice for a man in the suburbs of the city: "Notis—If eny mans or womans cows or oxen gits on to this here lot his or her tale will be cut off as the case may be."

"Innocents Abroad, or What Europe Saw In Us," by Chas. M. Snelling and B. F. Riley.

This is a most amusing and highly entertaining little book, containing an account of the adventures and misadventures of two mighty potentates, who, on traveling in a foreign land, realized to their surprise that they were only men after all.

The young gentlemen who have collaborated on this work use the word “find” in its colloquial sense of “provide for, furnish food for.” They show from their own experience how it is possible to give Germans at an expense of five dollars a night and charge twenty-five, thereby showing the advantages of a “lead-pipe cinch” on an unsuspecting public. A very valuable book for young men who wish to pay their own expenses while in college.

By virtue of the power vested in him by the Board of Trustees whose servant he is, the learned author endeavors in his usual terse style, without one unnecessary word, to show that intellectual ability is in direct proportion to the avoirdupois of the pedal extremities, and deduces as convincing proofs of his argument the examples of such famous Americans as himself, Guyton, Hurt, Trilby, and others too numerous to mention.

The young author sets forth in print the principles he has so consistently illustrated in his daily life. Among other innovations which he considers necessary, he advocates the adoption of the military dress coat for calling late in the evening.
"How to Write a Petition," by the Count de Valverax.

The author gives young students the benefit of his wide and varied experience and teaches how to frame a petition that would melt the heart of any professor, tho' it be "as hard as the adamantine lemon-pie of the railroad lunch-room."

"Why I Wore That Collar," by Clinton Thompson Haskell, of Toronto.

Mr. Haskell allays the fears of those who regarded his appearance on the campus wearing a standing collar as a sign of the approach of the end of the world, by showing that this new departure on his part was due to predestination, and was unavoidable.

The chief merit of this volume is its absolute freedom from anything that savors of exaggeration.

"How I Led the Boys to Victory," by Charles H. Black.

For the first time since the great Auburn game, the name of the real victor in that contest is made known to the world. By reason of his superior knowledge of the game acquired while calling signals for the Peachtree Blues and his absolute confidence in himself, Mr. Black was enabled by his very presence to so inspire the 'Varsity team as to make defeat impossible. All of this is clearly set forth in this book in the author's usual lively and fresh style.
There was a young Senior named Cook
Who tried to write poems like a book,
His rhymes were so vile
Everybody did smile
Who chanced on his jingles to look.

There was an old Doctor named Billy
Who held some receptions quite chilly,
His terrible stare
Gave the Freshman a scare,
And his feet knocked the Sophomore silly.

There was a man in last year's class
Who on "general knowledge" quite failed to pass,
So he jumped into law,
Where he shot off his jaw,
Till the Prof. said: "Mr. H., you're an ass."

There was a Professor named Dave
Who always needed a shave,
Any failure in Math
Aroused all his wrath,
And his Trig, made the Sophomore a slave.

There was a young man from Yahoo
Who of using his tricks tired grew,
White says it's a libel,
But he swapped for a Bible
And swiped McGregor's sign, too.

There was a young lawyer named Hawes
Who loved to neck without pause,
Some students one day
Saw his business-like way,
And this of their smiles was the cause.

There was a Senior named Morton
Whose forte was newspaper reportin',
He tried to play ball,
"Statuary, that's all,"
Was the sentence that ended his sportin'.

There was a law student named Keen
Whose smile was the sweetest e'er seen,
When the poor Red and Black
It took the wrong tack,
On him the Profs. vented their spleen.

There was an old German named Zip
Who refused a poor Senior a dip,
For the man didn't laugh
And his sides split in half
At the jokes that fell from his lip.

A Campus Idyll.

To the Billy in the Yahoo,
   Where the men of morals dwell,
Came the Billy, great in power,
   Lord of all, as Freshmen tell.

"Give thy Billy me, oh, Billy,
   In thy biz thou needest it not,"
Quoth the Billy great in power,
   Whom the Junior ne'er can spot.

So poor Billy, willy-nilly,
   While his heart is filled with fear,
Must his Billy give to Billy
   Whom the Janitors revere.

"H."

Ode to Dr. J. H. T. McP.

Respected, if voluble Doctor,
   On the currency question we split,
With our every-day transactions,
   Your theories don’t seem to fit.

By all the accepted proverbs,
   Talk is silver alway,
And with equally strong assurance,
   Silence is golden they say.

Independent of Bland or Stewart,
   Your "silver" is uncommonly free,
And whatever my opinion of Grover,
   A gold-bug I’ve got to be.

The Senior.
A Modern Instance.

The silence of death rested over the crowded gridiron which lately had resounded with the yells of excited 'Varsity boys. In one corner of the field a hushed and awe-struck group bent over the still and inert form of the great half-back, which a few moments before had teemed with manly life and strength. The surgeon slowly shook his head and whispered something in the ear of the friend who supported the doomed football player's head. "I'm dying, am I?" whispered the half-back to his grieving comrade, and great beads of sweat stand out on that friend's brow as he whispers back the mournful affirmation, and asks in saddest tones, "What must I tell Alice for you?" "Tell her," and the light comes back to his brave blue eyes, "tell her that I died with her name on my lips." "And Clara?" "Tell Clara," and a puzzled look crosses his haggard face, "tell Clara," now the lips smile, "tell her —, well," low his voice sinks with the cadence of death, "tell Clara the same thing." The foot-ball player was dead.
An Explanation.

A whisper once went 'round
'Mong the muses and the folk
That gather at Parnassus' Hill,
Of something that was found strangely amiss.
Of what they talked
You'd never guess.
'Twas nothing less
Than this:
Pegasus had balked!

"No, sir," said he, "without complaint I've borne
"All sorts of songsters, some
"Who wrote of hearts with anguish torn
"And such like truck unutterably bum,
"Others that with fiendish hellish glee
"Some things whereof 'twere pain to even tell.

"Got off such beastly rot as 'Sweet Marie,'
"'She's My Darling Carrie,' and 'Daisy Bell!'
"I'd gladly help on Freshmen poems and such,
"No word of protest e'er from me you've heard,
"But Pandora's really asking quite too much,
"When she talks about that Gainesville eagle bird."

We'd thought to have some verses written here
About the Gainesville Eagle and his flight,
But Pegasus straightway a station took,
And without him 'twere absurd to write.
On such a theme he quite refused to work,
Unmoved by thought of honor or of self,
So prompted by the horse sense classical
We leave the bird to Gainesville and himself.

EDS.
Some Rimes of the Times.

Maiden in car,
Student not far,
Window shut tight,
Student polite,
Window won't rise,
Weary, she sighs,
Then blushes; he tries,
And straight up it flies,
And so,
All's well,
For he could raise the window.
Thus they met on the car,
To love there's no bar,

Student strong, maiden pure,
Affinity sure.
Wedded soon,
Honey moon,
But alack,
Troubles black,
Student's broke, so perforce,
Wifey sues for divorce.
By decree of court,
Quick it comes—non-support.
They never speak, for
He could not raise the wind oh!

"H."
Conclusion.

In justice to myself as well as to Mr. Butner, I feel that I should make a statement concerning the peculiar position which I occupy in editing this volume of the PANDORA. There is nothing to which a baseball pitcher so much objects as being obliged to take another man's game off his hands. When I took up the work which Mr. Butner laid down, it was already late in the college term. I was in comparative ignorance as regards the nature of the task which lay before me. Mr. Butner had the work well under way, and he deserves much of the credit, if there is anything of good in this issue. However, my labor was of necessity more arduous than it would have been had I not been obliged to begin as a novice when it was already time for the PANDORA to be in press. I have had many difficulties to contend with; many mistakes have been made through ignorance, and many features that might have added greatly to the quality of the book have been omitted through hurry. I have done my best, however, with the aid of my associates, to make this a creditable volume. If we have failed it is not through want of will nor of untiring labor, but of time and of ability.

I have already spoken of the work and services rendered by Mr. J. H. Butner, who was elected Editor-in-Chief, but was forced to resign on account of ill-health. Mr. Joel J. Gibson, the Business Manager, has had entire charge of the business arrangements, and by his indefatigable industry has made this issue possible.

The Athletic Department was edited by Mr. John W. Morton, and his assistance has been most valuable to me. Messrs. Kemp and Chandler have also done good service.

The drawings are by Messrs. Murphey, '95; Dougherty, '95, and Floyd, '97. They have been most courteous and obliging, and I desire to thank them most heartily.

I have endeavored to make this issue of the PANDORA representative of the literary and artistic ability of the college, not of the board of editors alone. With this end in view, I have solicited contributions from all the classes. Holcombe Bacon, '96, has done the best work in response to my call for help. Boyd, '96, and Lockhart, '96, have also rendered valuable assistance.

In closing, I wish to thank our publisher, Mr. C. P. Byrd and his assistants, for their uniform kindness and courtesy. I need not say anything as regards the work they have done; the book speaks for itself.

If I can be of any assistance to my successor, I will gladly do all in my power to aid him by suggestions or otherwise.

WALTER A. HARRIS.
