Preface.

As most prefaces take the form of apologies, the present Board of Editors would gladly send out Volume VII. to the public, for the sake of novelty, without any reference to their trials; but the evil spirits set free by Pandora seem to have beset their liberator this year with unusual fury, so it is but proper that some facts should be made known as to the various obstacles encountered by the Editors, and leniency on the part of the public requested.

The present Board of Editors was not elected until after the Christmas holidays, so the work of a year has been crowded into a few months. Again, on account of the unusual business depression, it has been almost impossible to secure advertisements, and 'twas only after repeated and earnest efforts on the part of the Editors that a sufficient number were secured to warrant the publishing of our Annual.

The Editors, recognizing the fact that such an eventful college year as that of 1893-'94 should not be passed over unnoticed, have worked earnestly, and now offer to the public Volume VII. of the Pandora, in which a brief account is given of the most interesting and important events that have transpired at the University during the present year.

In giving a “true history of student life,” we have necessarily inserted a few jokes, and in some instances referred to boys as having the faces of dogs, the brains of butterflies, and the mouths of alligators; but we assure them beforehand that it was all done because of our desire to give a true history of student life, and not in order to wound their feelings. Should our apology not be accepted, the offended student can obtain satisfaction by applying to any two of the Editors.

If, with all our faults and shortcomings, we have succeeded in casting a few faint rays of pleasure upon the dark clouds that gather in the lives of all, we feel that our humble effort has not been in vain.

The Editors.
MAJOR CHARLES MORRIS.
To the Memory of the noble Gentleman,

Professor Charles Morris,

who, for twenty-eight years, instructed the students of the University by the example of his lofty character, as much as by his eloquent discourse from the chair, this volume is dedicated with all love and veneration.
"He was a man, take him for all in all;
We shall not look upon his like again."

Science teaches us that no energy is ever lost; vary it may in form, but beneath all its protean disguises the sharp eye of analysis detects its unmistakable presence. Disappear it may from the realm of the seen, but rest assured

"Somewhere yet that atom's force
Moves the light-poised universe."

In like manner the energy of human character, the force of a true and noble life, is never lost. Generations may come and go, dynasties may rise and fall, boundaries may change and thrones crumble into dust, but the waves of influence thus set in motion are as restless as the sea—more resistless than its tides. Long after the force of such a life has been seemingly spent, its unifying and ennobling touch is felt; long after the material part has been shattered, the perfume of true and righteous living remains to please and delight. Such a life was that of him to whom this volume of Pandora is dedicated. For years he was a center from which radiated rays of light to every part of the Empire State. From the rugged crags of the Blue Ridge to the blue waters of the Atlantic hundreds of high-minded and patriotic citizens—men whom the commonwealth delights to honor, and who form its true bulwark in time of trouble—learned at his feet not only the elements of that true and vigorous English of which he was such a consummate master, but, what is infinitely more important, the elements of that true and lofty manhood of which he was such a perfect exemplar. These, we are persuaded, will be pleased to know that the students of the University affectionately dedicate this their seventh Annual to him who was for so long a time their beau ideal of manhood, their more than Chevalier Bayard. This outward manifestation is, of a truth, insignificant; but it testifies to the inward flame of admiration and affection that burns in the hearts of every loyal son of our Alma Mater. Herein alone lies its importance and fitness.

It is no part of Pandora's purpose to enter upon an extended eulogy of the life and character of Major Morris. Other and far abler hands have portrayed the wonderful power of his intellect and the beautiful symmetry of his character. Pandora desires simply to add but a leaf to the garland of eulogy that has encircled his touch.

Major Charles Morris first saw the light of day upon the soil of that State famed in the history of the Republic as the "Mother of Statesmen." He sprang from the old Virginia aristocracy, and in the bosom of an aristocratic Virginia home breathed those influences that moulded and shaped his life. The old Virginia aristocracy has of late years fallen into hostile hands; it has been caricatured to such an extent that the world is apt to forget that from its ranks came the men who, above all others, for more than a hundred years shaped the destinies of the American colonies. The members of this aristocracy may indeed have been somewhat reckless and prodigal; but the historian discovers nowhere, save in classic Athens, such an amount of ability, talent and genius produced by so small a society. Strong-minded, courageous, hospitable and generous to a fault, proud as any Englishman who boasts his Norman descent, and chivalrous as any knight of "ye olden time," the Virginia gentlemen of the old school formed a type of which history furnishes no parallel. Major Morris possessed more than the excellencies of this excellent type. In him were happily blended all those elements that went to make up the typical Virginia gentleman—without, indeed, the faults that sometimes marred the picture. There was that about him which made you feel that you stood in the presence of one of Nature's noblemen. Of a very truth he was what he was. No sycophancy or deceit ever found lodgment in this heroic soul. Others might cringe to a sickly public opinion, others might bow the knee to the false gods of a degenerate time, but he would abide by his convictions; he, even if alone, would stand erect. Not content with semblance, he sought, above all, to know things as they are. And when he had thus learned them you might rest assured that he would give a true transcript of his brain. Men might differ from him in opinion, but none doubted his absolute sincerity. In analyzing heroism Emerson notes that sincerity forms its essential element. Under this conception of the case Major Morris was truly heroic. Sincerity was the one all-pervading force of his life. A Spartan in the sterner virtues of manhood, he was a Bayard in courage, attainments and integrity. A Stoic in his rigid adherence to morality, he was, nevertheless, a Christian in all the heavenly graces.

Words are powerless here. No mere word-picture can do justice to the beautiful symmetry of his character. To those who learned wisdom at his feet he will remain ever embedded in memory as their model of true and lofty manhood, and sad, indeed, will be the day when they forget his shining example.

"Green be the turf above thee,
Instructor of our better days.
None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but in praise."

THE SENIORS PLANT THEIR CLASS TREE AND CHRISTEN IT WITH BEER
With thoughts that blend regret and joy,
   He sees his life's first era close,
Whose days were all of sunshine wrought
   And tinged with colors of the rose.

With deep regret—because 'tis pain
   To leave the things one loves so well,
With joy—because ambitious hopes
   Within his eager bosom swell.

Of college life, so gay and bright,
   He carries naught away perchance,
Except a flower or photograph
   That bears some sweet significance.

Another scene breaks on his view,
   The conflict keen of human life,
So vast, so fierce, he feels himself
   A worse than Freshman in the strife.

But yet he stands arrayed in strength
   And with his classmates forms a band,
By cultured brain and spirit made,
   The future leaders of the land.

So hail ye, Senior, and farewell,
   And may what Fortune yields to thee
Be not less bright than ideals wrought
   In heat of youthful revery.

SAMUEL B. YOW, ΦΔΘ, A.B., D., AVALON, GA.
N THE early fall of 1890 there might have been seen on the historic old campus of the Georgia University a large number of strange faces. Such a concourse at that season of the year of new men, or, as they soon get to be called, “Freshmen,” indicated that the grand old institution was about to begin another year’s work which would only add fresh laurels to the glories of the past.

Some of the new comers were seeking the dignity of the Sophomores; a few aspired to the Junior Class; but by far the most of them were directing their energies to enter as humble Freshmen. Having passed safely through the terrible ordeal known as entrance examinations, they were ushered into their classes, and for the first time the boys of the Black and Blue were united as the Class of Ninety-Four.

With awe and trembling the first few days were spent. Soon, however, they came to look upon the Faculty as their friends, and as men intent on bestowing upon them the priceless gift of a thorough education. They were not long in “catching on” to College life, and entered with full spirit into all College affairs.

Thirty-six strong, the Class of Ninety-Four began its brilliant career. Many of the pioneer members have left us; some have fallen by the wayside; some few failed to climb the ladder which separates the lower from the higher classes; one or two have dropped out for other reasons; but Nature has blessed us, and called none to the “unknown realm,” and Ninety-Four has to-day, as its nucleus, the bright and happy band which first came in ’90.

On the field of athletics the Black and Blue waved triumphantly the very first year, notwithstanding the fact that the other classes generally have the advantage over the Freshmen. The battery for the College Nine, Wadley and Herty, was furnished by us, while our class team was victorious in every game save one, this being won by the Sophomores in playing off a tie. In the only football game of the season Ninety-Four defeated the boys of Ninety-One.
Then all went merrily with Ninety-Four; she had made a record, and was proud of it. The Freshman course was drawing to a close. However pleasant this year may be to a student; however much he may rejoice at the victories of his class; and however much satisfaction he may get from an approving conscience for his well-done work, he always welcomes the close of the year, which, at its best, is one of taunts and jeers. Soon the finals—the “pons asinorum” of College life—were held. The bridge, though narrow and steep, was safely passed, and the boys of Ninety-Four went home for a few months with happy hearts, knowing that their time would come in the fall, and that they would wreak vengeance on the succeeding class for all the sorrows and troubles of their Freshman career.

At the opening of the Sophomore year over a dozen new men came to share the fortune of Ninety-Four. Again were our boys prominent in athletics. To the Varsity Football Team we furnished the Captain, and, under his guidance, it defeated Mercer to the tune of 50 to 0. The third act of the drama began in September, '92. But little was done this year in athletics, on account of resolutions passed by the Board of Trustees, which forbade inter-collegiate games. These restrictions were removed, however, at their next meeting, and the season of '93 and '94 opened under the most favorable auspices. Each of the classes organized a football team. The picked men of these were chosen as a College team—Ninety-Four furnishing four out of the eleven. The class team of Ninety-Four defeated the Juniors, with a score of twelve to six. The other classes were saved from a similar fate only by an agreement of the Captains to leave off the rest of the class games, for the purpose of devoting all time and energy toward training and perfecting the Varsity team.

Such has been the history of Ninety-Four. When this brief encomium reaches the eyes of the public, the class will have had one of the brightest and gayest Commencement seasons in years. Away from the Alma Mater, in the hands of the world, they will take the world into their hands, fill the big offices of the land, and rule with such power and wisdom that all will exclaim, “Great is the Class of Ninety-Four!”

THE JUNIOR'S DREAM.
Who's called the pride of L. C. I.?
Who wrings from maids in town a sigh—
A killing glance in either eye?
    The Junior.

To whom is sent by Rafe and John
A billet-doux entitled dun,
Until it ceases to be fun?
    The Junior.

Who always is at chapel found,
Attentive so to every sound,
He wouldn't turn his head around?
    The Junior.

Who thinks of course he knows the rule
By which the kindly Prof. to fool,
And then returns to summer school?
    The Junior.

Who see within the Future's glass
Themselves the greatest Senior Class
That e'er did through the college pass?
    The Juniors.

History of Ninety-Five.

N ATTEMPTING to give only a mere idea of the Class of Ninety-Five, as a class, with a few events connected with its history, such a brilliant lustre clusters around her past that the historian, conscious of his own inability to do her justice, with reluctance takes up his pen to tell of her history—unexcelled in the past, and with a bright future. Our remarkable aptness to learn, and studious habits, have endeared us to professors and students alike. Verily, the days when Rome was in the zenith of her glory, and "to be a Roman was greater than a king," is produced in miniature in the Class of Ninety-Five, for it is only necessary to state that you are a member of Ninety-Five to command the highest respect.

The Professors all agreed that ours was the best class that ever entered the University, and we have upheld our prestige.

Of the fifty-two that registered in our Freshman Class only nineteen original ones remain. The inexorable decree of time has caused some to fall by the wayside, some to give up in despair, and the Almighty, in his beneficent wisdom, has summoned three of our brightest members to

"That undiscovered country from whose bourn
No traveler returns."

But reinforced in our Sophomore year by eleven, and in our Junior by six, we now number 36 loyal members.

While in our ranks the brain of a Shakespeare or a Milton has not been revealed, yet Ninety-Five claims a man the literary peer of any undergraduate.

We have reaped our share of the honors. Last year we were represented by a champion debater. This year one of our number was the editor-in-chief of the Magazine. We also have a representative on the Red and Black. Our ability is best shown in the halls of the literary societies, where the eloquent voices and convincing logic of the members of Ninety-Five have never been equaled.

As for politicians we are as numberless as the stars, as the sands of the seashore. It has already been predicted that we will have the first Representative in the Georgia Legislature, and when his candidacy shall have been announced, each of us will enlist himself under his banner, and crown his ambition with success.

We present the greatest variety of men of any class, having a preacher, the tallest man and the largest man in College. Poets, orators, hard students, or athletes, do not alone constitute our class, but we possess them all in a remarkable degree. And no doubt the success of the Glee Club and the Thalian Dramatic Club is due, to a great extent, to the efforts of Ninety-Five.

On the field Ninety-Five is the pride of all. In our Freshman year we marched off victoriously with the pennant. Last year fate decreed that we should come second. One of our members is honored with the responsible position of Captain of the 'Varsity baseball team, and another is Manager. In football three out of eleven places on the "Varsity" team were filled by Ninety-Five, and it is a recognized fact that in the victories of the "Varsity" over Furman University, Augusta and Savannah, much of the credit belongs to us. Though a number of athletes have fallen out, our prestige is still recognized by all.

In conclusion, kind reader, judge not too harshly this imperfect narrative of a class, characterized alike by their lofty character and purity of thought, for the fault rests in the historian.

When the subject is one's class, it is commonly thought that superfluous praise is engaged in, and events magnified, and faults unobserved. If such has been my failing, my prayer is for light, that I may see the unvarnished truth.

Historian.
THE SOPHOMORES IMITATE THE SENIORS, BUT PUT THE BEER TO BETTER USE.
Oh, how did he ever from the Freshman Class escape,
Is a thing that we all would like to know,
For excepting self-esteeem, his freshness is the same
That it was in the days a year ago.

He may smoke a cigarette with a finer air of grace,
He may get excused from drill with greater ease,
And, to Doctor's swell receptions, may be more often bid,
But show his gain in knowledge, if you please.

For the faculty were dreaming when they said that he could rise
If wisdom is the test on which they pass,
For his emeraldine ways are as verdant as of yore,
Just intensified by egotistic brass.

'Tis his pride to make the Freshman's life a nuisance and a bore
By plaguing him with every sort of prank,
But it comes from secret fear which he knows is grounded well,
That they'll class him in the very self-same rank.

So the unregenerate freshness of the Sophomoric lad
Strong witness to this simple fact doth bear,
That his present name's inaccurate—it really ought to be
The second-handed Freshman from last year.

History of Ninety-Six.

Lord Macaulay has said, in one of his essays on history, that the perfect historian is the one who relates no facts and attributes no expression to his characters which are not authenticated by sufficient testimony, and in whose work the character and spirit of an age is exhibited in miniature. Thus it is that the historian of the Class of Ninety-Six will attempt to write.

The character and spirit of the past year shall be exhibited in miniature only, for the achievements of this class have been so great that should they be shown otherwise, they would go beyond the limit of belief. Neither will he relate any fact, nor give any expression to his characters that is not proven by sufficient testimony. Where truth abounds such prevarications are not necessary. The Class of Ninety-Six has done well. In all branches of College life it has carried off its full share of honors.

At every meeting of the literary societies may be heard the stentorian voice of some Sophomore, tearing in pieces and throwing to the winds the arguments of Freshmen, Juniors, Seniors, and even Lawyers, making them only a mass of thoughtless nonsense, and leaving their owners with a lot of confused and chaotic ideas. As presiding officers their dignity is something surprising, and their decisions are fair, just, unprejudiced, and given only after due thought and consideration of the discussion. In athletics they rank from the strongest to the weakest. In the "gym," they are equal to any. In the class games of football they won every game they played and didn't loose a point. On the College team they had four members, all of whom made handsome records.

In society they do well. They can walk as slow by Lucy Cobb as anybody, and the girls say their way of making love is something real cute, and the rapidity and business-like manner with which they go about it is awfully nice. As dancers, musicians and serenaders they have a very wide reputation.

In the recitation room they are so orderly and attentive-that the Professors are always glad to see them. With attention at good, booking at very good, and recitation at excellent, they equal, if they do not surpass, any of the other classes.

So far the reader has only seen the sunshine. Dark clouds are sure to sail over the clearest and brightest sky. Ninety-Six has had, among all its sunshine, some dark and stormy clouds to hover over it, and threaten its destiny, for the members of Ninety-Six find great sport in booking, and, pushed on by the desire for mischief, they will cut. The “reception,” too, is sometimes an attraction. But, with all our good and bad works, another year has come and gone. The half of our College course is finished. Have we done well? Yes, and better still, for since the launching of our ship in September, '93, we have sailed her successfully. Smoothly has she glided through the seas of knowledge, and easily ridden the billows of opposition. With her prow of determination she has ploughed deep into the waters of learning, and though tossed by the storms of discouragement, and threatened by the rocks of temptation, she sails serenely on.

Hold to the wheel, boys.

Keep her rudder straight. Let her sails be ever outspread, catching the winds that drive us continually on to a higher education. And when at last we shall have completed the entire journey, let us weigh the anchor of hope that the future will be as well, as good and as prosperous as the years of ninety-three and ninety-four. Historian.
THE FRESHMEN PULL UP THE SENIORS' TREE AND DEPRIVE IT OF ITS CHRISTENING FLUID.
The Freshmen.

What causeth thee, my little man, to weep?
Come, leave thy tears, and sit upon my knee—
Here, take a handkerchief, and dry thine eyes,
And now confide thy troubles all to me.

Have they unkindly hit thee with a stone
For playing marbles on the baseball ground,
And said thy head, when by the missile struck,
Gave forth an echoingly hollow sound?

Perhaps thou hast been handed a cigar,
Which secretly thou didst attempt to smoke?
Thou should remember when they give thee such
'Tis less a favor than a cruel joke.

Or say they that thy class clap is so loud
Its echo can be heard for quite a way,
And did it not thy manners match so well,
They could not let thee wear it for a day?

Or have they made a rule at Lucy Cobb
That nothing less than Sophs can walk thereby?
I know that this would grieve thy very soul—
Thou say'st 'tis none of these that make thee cry?

Then 'twas the gravest danger of them all
That did thy little Freshman's life inclose—
Thus be thou warned, in spite of all we do
The college old maid sometimes will propose.

History of Class '97.

In September 20, 1893, the University of Georgia opened its doors and began the session of 1893-94. This event, though at the time it excited no particular attention, is destined to adorn a bright page in the history of our State. Perhaps this statement may seem startling to those unacquainted with the facts, but a word of explanation, and all is plain—it marked the beginning of the Class of Ninety-Seven.

When this Class first met it gave promise of becoming the best in the University, but it has excelled even the most sanguine hopes of its friends and admirers. It has been strengthened numerically from time to time, and, with the valuable assistance of the Faculty, its members have added to their store of knowledge, until now it is acknowledged by all to be the leading Class of the University of Georgia.

The first week of the fall term was devoted to politics, but when the Class officers had been elected and a majority of the Class had taken their "turning," they gave themselves up to the business of making a record and "thereby hangs a tale."

In athletics Freshmen have taken a prominent stand. We were allowed to meet only one team, the Sophomore, on the football gridiron. True, we were defeated by that team, but the defeat was probably due to our over-confidence. The other classes saved themselves from an ignominious defeat at the hands of the Freshman team by deciding not to play the remaining class games. We aided the "Varsity" team by furnishing two substitutes. In baseball we intend to stand at the top, and doubtless the end of the season will find our team near the top and struggling hard for the championship. On field day we intend to show the great athletic ability of Freshmen by feats which will surprise the higher Classmen and astonish even the Lawyers.

Socially we are as popular as anybody. Although, as a rule, Freshmen are too much devoted to their books to go in society, yet those who do indulge in social pleasures take a leading place. As an evidence of our popularity, we need only refer to the number of Freshmen who attend the Chancellor’s monthly reception and the Commandant’s receptions on drill evenings.

Our record in politics is well known. In the Literary Societies we have held, at some time, almost every office, and the election of any officer of the Freshman Class is an exciting event.

In the class room our record is one of which we are proud. We have studied and toiled, not for our own glory, but that we may be a credit and honor to our State. Some of us intend to be Congressmen, while others, sad to relate, may some day be members of the State Legislature. If our career in after life be as bright as we intend our college career to be, there is no honor for which, with hopes of success, we may not aspire.

In the College Orchestra, in the Glee Club, in the Literary Societies and in every organization where talent is recognized, we have been well represented. What Class can show a better record?

Yet college life has not been a bed of roses for the average Freshman. Hard work has fallen in the path of most of them. A few, from sickness and other causes, have been forced to leave us, but in the Fall, strengthened in numbers, we will make the campus ring with Ninety-seven! Hip! Hooray! G - E - O - R - G - I - A! Georgia.

If the Historian unintentionally has failed to keep within the limits of truth, his only excuse is that in his endeavor to do justice to such an inspiring theme he may have failed to see the limits. When so many truthful statements can be made which are favorable to us there can be no excuse for intentional exaggeration. If any have formed the idea, from reading this Class History, that Freshmen are conceited, we beg leave to undeceive them. This apparent conceit is caused by the fact that, as every cloud has a silver lining, whenever a cloud existed, we have endeavored to push back the dark face and show only the silver lining.

Such has been the past History of the Class of Ninety-Seven; time alone will reveal the future. As it lies before the Historian, bright with great achievements, he is tempted to reveal it; but no, that would be unfair to his successors. To these shall be left the pleasant task of relating how the future has kept the promises which the past has made.

Historian.
Behold the flower of all the flock, the erudite student
Of law,
Whose laudable aim is to rise in the world by the resonant clank of
His jaw.

He carries a cane wherever he goes, to add to his Dignity rare,
But the Freshman's his chum, and his innocent ways have a painfully
Grassy-green air.

For he cannot play cards, he's a novice at pool—raise your hands all who this
Do believe—
But his knowledge of law is so deep and profound as these minor defects
To retrieve.

So drink with me, then, to the bright legal light—since he scruples to drink
For himself—
With a hope from our hearts that his talents and tongue will never repose on
The shelf.

BEYING the trumpet call of outraged justice, and vowing vengeance upon her adversaries, a number of young men embraced her cause, and the better to prepare themselves for the conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil, matriculated at the University of Georgia. At the opening of the Fall Session these were few in number, but formed a nucleus that by numerous later additions has grown to almost double its former size, and forms one of the brightest and best, if not the largest class, that ever graced the city of Athens with its lordly presence.

Georgia, our own well-beloved, is well represented and her pristine honor and dignity well sustained by her noble sons of noble sires, while from Canada, Mexico, Dakota, South Carolina and Tennessee come the pick and flower of their chivalry to identify their interests with ours.

One comrade, to our sorrow, has fallen by the way and is with us no more, having acceded to the urgent request of King Tillman to become his Royal Counselor and Adviser. May success be his, and may he, in the near future, honor us as we hope to honor him.

In every line of college work and pleasure, the representatives of the Law Class stand among the foremost. Ours are the best and deepest students; ours the best athletes; ours the dead-game sports; ours the pets and darlings of society.

Among us are to be found men of all ages, sizes and conditions. The frolicsome youth and the beardless younger of eighteen years, and the mature, but jolly, old man of forty, who, like Uncle Ned, has no hair on the top of his head; the delver in the hidden stone of psychology and philosophy, the student of deep, ethical problems; and the staid, matter-of-fact man; the argumentator, the predestinationist and the man of free will; the flowery, eloquent and the practical business man; the timid and retiring youth and the gay and careless sport; the woman-hater and the woman-lover; yet are they all diamonds of the first water, in the rough, perhaps, but when polished by rubbing against the world will dazzle the senses of the people by their lustrous brilliancy.

The earnest and well directed efforts of our instructors have been heartily seconded, and the Class, while progressing rapidly, has gained a thorough knowledge of the principles of law.

Not content with this, but desirous of better fitting themselves for their vocation, the members of the class organized among themselves a debating society that has proven of great benefit to each member thereof.

The stars that, in the horizon of public greatness, represent Toombs, Webster, Calhoun and that late, but brilliant star of Grady, have veiled themselves with the mist of obscurity since the advent of the Sun (of LAW, '94.)

The Moot Courts, presided over by their Honors, Judges Morris and Cobb, have proven successful beyond expectation. In the cases thus far tried there has been displayed no small amount of legal learning and address. The verdant Freshman, the all-wise Sophomore, the aspiring Junior and even the solemn and dignified Senior, listening in reverential awe to the soul-harrowing, hair-raising and ear-splitting appeals of the future Kernels, have been swayed by their magic eloquence, even as the saplings are bent by the wintry storm-blasts.

Alas, for the day when Law '94 shall receive their diplomas, and go forth into the world to punish wrong, to prevent injustice and uphold the right, but above all secure the cash—the just reward of their labors. Woe to the wretch who falls under the ban of their displeasure, for his life is short and his cash in the pocket of the lawyer. Verily, the sheep-stealer shall steal the little lamb, the lawyer shall recover the lamb and his fee shall be two sheep. The rich man dieth and his heirs sue each other for his property, but they sue in vain, for it is become the possession of the lawyers. Men may have money and men may have property, but the lawyer getteth it all after awhile. Justice must be done to the poor and the rich, to the idler and laborer, to the merchant and farmer, to the innocent and criminal; but the lawyer's pocket must be filled thereby.

So beware, ye wrong-doers, lest ye fall into the clutches of '94's Kernels.

Our Alumni.

If the purpose of an institution of higher education, under the control of the State, is the training of citizens for that State in all the walks of life, surely the University of Georgia has well fulfilled her mission. Though she has struggled for over a century against abuse and calumny, with slender resources and poor equipment, it has been her proud privilege to give to the State a few of those great names “that were not born to die,” and to give, besides, a host of men who, in every calling, have well illustrated her teachings, and repaid a thousand-fold all the benefits conferred on them by the State. It is greatly to be regretted that better statistics of the Alumni of the University have not been collected. One who would write on this subject must rely on the Centennial Catalogue, which is necessarily very incomplete, and even where complete very condensed. But even with these meagre statistics the attempt to confine an article to the limits of this publication becomes almost impossible. Single names occur on which volumes have been written. Many things of interest strike even the cursory reader as he glances over the pages of this modest Catalogue. He sees names ranging from the Vice-President of the Confederate States through all the grades of political honors, Cabinet Officers, United and Confederate States Senators, United and Confederate States Representatives, Senators and Representatives of the State of Georgia, Mayors and Councilmen of cities without number. He sees judicial officers ranging all the way from Justices of the Supreme Court down. He sees military officers ranging from Major-General down to the humble but heroic private, and reads again and again the ennobling words “killed in battle.” He sees the significant blank under the years 1864 and 1865. He sees the names of great divines, whose godliness and eloquence have made their names famous throughout the church; great teachers, whose fame is bounded not even by this continent; journalists, whose pens and tongues have led public opinion on the great questions that have confronted the nation; and men of administrative ability, who have done much to make good Georgia’s boast that she is the Empire State of the South. No mention can be made of the large number who, though they have attained no eminence among their fellows, have yet, in humble but no less important positions, done well the work that lay before them, as industrious and patriotic citizens, to build up the waste places, and disseminate those germs of learning and culture which are here fostered.

From the very first the University has given to the State men of prominence. The second name in this Catalogue is that of Augustin S. Clayton, Judge of the Superior Court, member of the United States Congress. The same year furnished Williams Rutherford, who, after serving his State so well for so many years, now passes his honored old age quietly on the scene of his old labors, as Professor Emeritus of Mathematics. The record of the first ten years, 1804–1813, containing the names of 61 graduates, shows four Judges of the Superior Court, three members of Congress, one Speaker of the State House of Representatives, eleven members of the Board of Trustees, and four College Professors. And this proportion is well maintained in the records that follow. Merely to call the roll of distinguished names would almost fill the covers of this book, so that this rapid review must notice only a few of the most prominent. In 1821 occurs the name of E. A. Nisbet, Judge of the Supreme Court; in 1822 that of Wiley W. Mason, the distinguished Chancellor of the Supreme Court of Alabama; and in 1823 that of Iverson L. Harris, another Judge of the Supreme Court. In 1826 occur the names of John A. Campbell, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and Assistant Secretary of the Confederate States; Chas. H. DuPont, of the Supreme Court of Florida, and Paul F. Eve, the distinguished surgeon and Professor of Surgery, with Robert Dougherty, Wm. E. Jones and James A. Meriwether, Judges of the Supreme Courts of Alabama, Texas and Georgia, respectively, and the two latter members of Congress. The year 1829 was rich in teachers and preachers, comprising Nathaniel M. Crawford, President of Mercer University; Shaler G. Hillyer, Professor in the same; Richard D. Moore, Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in this University; Geo. F. Pierce, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Thomas F. Scott, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church; John N. Waddell, Chancellor of the University of Mississippi, and John B. Trippe, Treasurer of the State. In 1832 graduated James Johnson, Provisional Governor of Georgia, and Alexander H. Stephens, member of Congress, Vice-President of the Confederate States, again member of Congress and Governor, statesman and orator. In 1833 John J. Gresham, the late distinguished President of the Board of Trustees. In 1834 we have again two Governors: Howell Cobb, member of Congress for many years, Secretary of the United States Treasury, President of the Provisional Congress of the Confederate States, who rose from the rank of Colonel to that of Major-General in the Confederate States army; and Herschel V. Johnson, also member of Congress, Judge of the Superior Court, and Governor. In 1835 graduated Crawford W. Long, for whom is claimed, and justly, the distinguished honor of being the discoverer of anesthesia. In 1836 occurs the name of Benjamin C. Yancey, member of the Legislatures of South Carolina, Alabama and Georgia, and Minister to the Argentine Confederation; in 1837 James Jackson, member of Congress and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; and in 1838 Isaiah T. Irvin, Speaker of the House; John LeConte, the distinguished Professor of Physics, and sometime President of the University of California, and Benj. W. Palmer, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of New Orleans, and one of the most eloquent, influential and distinguished ministers of that powerful denomination. In 1839 Alexander M. Speer and Robert P. Tripe, Justices of the Supreme Court. In 1841 the gallant T. R. R. Cobb, Brigadier-General C. S. A., and Joseph LeConte, the distinguished Professor of Geology in the University of California.

And so this list might be extended indefinitely. We will mention only Dr. J. L. M. Curry, Trustee of the Peabody Fund; Benjamin H. Hill, the distinguished orator and U. S. Senator; N. J. Hammond, the present distinguished President of the Board of Trustees; James H. Blount, who served his State so well in Congress for many years that friends and political enemies united in an unexampled ovation when he retired; A. O. Bacon and Pope Barrow, the former for many years a member of the Legislature and Speaker of that body, and the latter U. S. Senator; Malcolm Johnston, the well-known litterateur, and Henry W. Grady, journalist and orator, whose untimely death was, and is still, so universally mourned. This list is so far from being exhaustive that great injustice is done to many men whose services have been no less valuable and no less appreciated by their State.

But the claim has been made that the University has outlived her usefulness, and no longer sends out men fitted to become leaders of the people. A single glance will show how untenable this position is: one of her sons is President of the Senate of Georgia; another the Speaker of the House, whose predecessor was also an Alumnus; four of her largest newspapers, and dozens of her smaller ones, are managed by Alumni—while the names of Blount, Hammond, Bacon, Barrow, Thomas, and a host of others now living, and the rolls of her Representatives in the Legislature, attest her influence in the State. And this is not all. Even her younger Alumni are rapidly pushing to the front, as is attested by the number who are elected to positions of responsibility and honor.

When we contrast the small number of the citizens of Georgia who are trained in the University with the large number of her Alumni who rise to prominence, we must admit that the University has repaid many times the small debt she owes the State.

A most pleasing fact is the interest the Alumni feel in their Alma Mater, as is attested by the number banded together in the Alumni Associations throughout the State. The greatest credit is due Major P. W. Meldrim, of Savannah, for the interest he has taken in these Associations, and if his efforts are seconded as they should be the united body of Alumni will make an impress on the State that will silence all opposition.

The claim is not made that every man who graduates at the University becomes famous, but it may truly be said of her, that while many colleges can claim more Alumni, few can claim more who have risen to high places of honor.

Fraternity Life at the University.

The fraternity spirit at the University is one of the most strongly marked and attractive features of the college life. It is practically the savoring salt of the ten months of almost unintermittent college duties, bringing together in the closest social and fraternal relations the students in numbers just large enough to afford them the enjoyment of close association without the danger of disturbance from internal wrangles or dissensions.

Of fraternity life in general it may be said that association is a natural instinct, a first principle among human inclinations. It is exhibited in earliest childhood. Cliques and clans, in the milder significance of bands of associates, characterize all early schoolboy days; the fraternity of college life is the intermediate association enjoyed by the youth on the verge of manhood; masonry, with its kindred associations, with their binding ties, is the fraternity field of the adult.

"Show me the man who is a good Mason," said a well-known Knight Templar, "and I'll show you a good man." So it is almost throughout. The collegian who is true to the principles of his fraternity, if they be good ones, and none founded on bad principles can long survive, is the best student of books and of men. He is as good a moral factor as a college can have. Abolish the fraternity which affords him his foundation principle, and he loses his influence in a great measure to discourage and prevent the formation of cliques and bands whose only purpose and aim is to annoy and destroy. The only tie of such a band becomes the common knowledge of the mischief done and the perpetrators are not revealed.

The spirit and feeling among the Greek letter men is on a far higher plane. The strength of the tie which binds them finds its origin in higher motives and aims. It grows out of a desire for a pure and elevating social intercourse, an association which benefits and strengthens. In daily college life a man associates with all; in his fraternity sanctum he comes in closer association with those whom he has chosen and whose influence upon his life and actions is more impressive and lasting. This in its last analysis is at the bottom of fraternity life.

While the introduction of the fraternity into college politics is perhaps to be deprecated, it is no more than natural, where the field of honor is open, that a candidate's friends should urge him strongest. This feature of the fraternity tie, however, is entirely incidental, not basal, necessarily so, perhaps, as long as there is such a thing as politics among the collegians, but none the less incidental. Fraternities are not sought, nor do they seek with political ends in view. When a member of a fraternity enters the field, it is incumbent upon his associates to support him, but the idea which draws college men together in these fraternal bands does not have its origin here. It is the association, the social feature, which is uppermost.

One great mistake made by the opponents of the Greek letter society lies here. They mistake its objects and purposes, or if they do not, conditions have undergone a great change in the short time since the writer was a student. The place for reform is in the politics of the campus, the animus of which is not confined to one or two fraternities, but rather to cliques of much larger numbers. It is not expedient or necessary to discuss here the means of reform. This is not the purpose of this brief statement, which is but to assert that the fraternities in their spirit, purpose and aims are not inconsistent with the best and most satisfactory college discipline. It is needless to refer to the aspirations of fraternity men to see that their fraternity maintains its rank in scholarship. It is needless to refer to the rivalry among them to retain their share of the college honors. If it has been shown that the basis of the Greek letter fraternity life is a desire for an elevating social intercourse, not transitory, instead of a desire to produce strife or dissension or to carry out political aims legally or otherwise, the humble purpose of the writer has been accomplished.

Ode to a Diploma.

O little Dip.—of sheepskin wrought,
   Whose folds bright ribbons gay entwine,
In Latin writ—I suffer doubt
   If I shall ever call thee mine.

I sought thee long, I sought thee well,
   With perseverance firm and true,
Until there crossed my path in life
   A winsome maid with eyes of blue.

Alas, that Science lacked the charms
   To draw my thoughts from that sweet face;
Alas, that Knowledge lacked the power
   To blind me to that beauteous grace.

But so they did, and now my hopes
   Of owning thee doth fade away.
I fear they will have disappeared
   By dawning of Commencement Day.

Howe'er, thy loss is not the stroke
   That thrills the chord of deepest woe;
The annals of my Senior year
   A sadder tale than that doth show.

I could resign thee with a smile,
   And let thee pass without a care,
If that those eyes of azure hue
   Sought me, and not that Freshman there.

After the Ball.

I.
A little maiden climbed a wooden leg
And for a story she began to beg,
"Why have you one eye, why a broken nose,
Why has your left ear such a crooked pose?"
"Ah, little maiden," sighed the uncle, sad,
"Long years ago, pet, I did not look so bad.
I became an athlete early one fall,
And this is the outcome, after the ball."

II.
We sent out a challenge
To all the teams around,
But when the games were over
My arm could not be found.
Long did I search it,
The Captain's aid did call,
But still that arm was missing
After the ball.

III.
Loosely in its socket
Hung my other leg,
And 'tis for that reason
I wear this wooden peg.
My left ear was crooked,
Black my eye and all.
Oh, I was in a sad plight
After the ball.

CHORUS:—After the ball is over,
   After the game is done;
   After the players leaving,
   After the set of sun.

Many a head is aching,
   If we could know it all;
Many the shoulder that's out of joint
   After the ball.

IV.
Long years have past, child,
Since I took my bed,
Washing my cork arm
With the tears I shed.
Perhaps that's why I'm single
And my head is bald;
No one would have me—
After the ball.
ATHLETICS.
Athletics.

The past year has ushered in a new era in the history of University Athletics, and never before have we met with as much success in all its branches. At the present time athletics are on a firmer foothold than ever at the University, and the progress made during the session of 1893-'94 has surpassed the expectations of even the most sanguine.

Immediately after College opened, in September, the Captains of the class teams, who had been elected the preceding year, just before commencement, set to work at once to organize their respective teams. A class league was formed, dates of games arranged, and two or three exciting games were played on the campus. The class games, however, were discontinued, in order to form a "Varsity" team. In the class games that were played, though, some excellent material was developed, and it was seen that by proper training a good "Varsity" eleven could be formed. So the services of a competent coach were secured, and all men trying for the team went into strict training at once. Every afternoon on the campus the "Varsity" and "Scrub" teams were kept hard at work. The team which was finally put into the field met with splendid success, considering the very short time they were in the hands of a trainer, and out of the five games played won two of them and tied another, the two games lost being the first two played. Our boys deserve a great deal of credit for the energetic way in which they worked, and nothing but love for the old University could have prompted them to act thus. Although we suffered some inconvenience in training, on account of not being provided with proper training quarters, yet never a grumble was heard. Good training quarters are something to be desired, and there is not a man in the University who does not sincerely wish that the time will soon come when we shall become the proud possessor of this long-felt want.

After a short period of inactivity following the Christmas holidays, a class baseball league was organized, consisting of five strong and pretty evenly matched teams. After a couple of weeks or more practicing, the match games were played, which not only proved very interesting, but developed some good baseball talent, which otherwise might have remained undiscovered. We always had large and enthusiastic crowds to witness the games, and a neat sum was netted the Athletic Association resulting from the gate receipts. The pennant was won by the Sophomores, this team winning all games played. A "Varsity" nine will now be formed, which will no doubt be a good one, judging from the very fair sample of ball-playing exhibited in the class games.

The annual field day exercises were held on the campus, Friday, April 27. From the number of records broken, it is seen to be the most successful one ever held at the University. The following are the events in which our College records were broken: Standing high jump, standing broad jump (with bells), standing broad jump (without bells), putting 16 lb. shot, three legged race, pole vault, sack race, and throwing 16 lb. hammer, while the records in all the other events were very close to the best ones ever made here.

With the field day exercises, this short history of athletics for the past year ends, and merely a glance over it will show the great progress made. We secured rather a late start in football, 'tis true, but this could not have been very well avoided. But the benefits of an early start are many, and easily seen, and it is hoped this fault will be remedied next year, for although our team met with much success, still with an earlier start, they could have met with more. We can say, however, and conscientiously too, that we have done well, but we must remember though that we can do better. With this fact in view, and with the experience of the past year to back us, let us return next year all agreed upon one thing, and that is to work for our University, and never to cease, until we stand pre-eminent among our sister Colleges.

Class Tree Exercises,

Class of '94, University of Georgia.

Wednesday, April 18, 1894.

Program.

Prayer, ........... The Chaplain, J. B. Madden.
Poem, ............. Poet, T. A. McGregor.
Song, ............... The Class.
Planting Tree, ......... The Class.
Yell, ................. The Class.
"Pipe of Peace," ........ The Class.
Benediction, ............ Prof. Barrow.
We are the Class of '94,
Assembled here to-day,
To plant our little sapling
And to sing our little lay.
We look ahead with much delight
To the day we get our “dips,”
And embark upon the Sea of Life,
With smiles wreathed round our lips.

CHORUS:
Ta-ra-ra, Ta-ra-ra,
The Class of '94.
A finer looking set of men
Was never seen before.

We started out as Freshmen,
A lovely set of boys,
Who had just become accustomed
To do without their toys;
But it did not take us long to learn
To look out for number one,
And not to let the college sports
Relieve us of our “mun.”

CHORUS.
From Freshman Class to Sophomore
Was but an easy jump,
But to get from Soph to Junior
We had to get a hump.
From Junior then to Senior
We came without a halt,
And now if we don’t get our “dips”
It won’t be our fault.

CHORUS.

The sapling which we plant to-day
We contemplate with glee,
Because we think this sapling
Will become a mighty tree.
We think that ours will grow aloft
And spread its arms out wide,
Although most all of the class trees planted
Here before have died.

CHORUS.
We’ll plant our tree and give our yell
And smoke our pipe of peace,
And when each one has taken a puff
Why, then I think we’ll cease.
We’ll water our little sapling
With a bottle of “Eau de Vie,”
Because we think that “Eau de Vie”
Has a life-giving quality.

CHORUS.
We all love one another,
With more than the love of a friend;
We’ll serve each other gladly
Until our journey’s end;
And when we’ve crossed the Sea of Life,
Almost to the other shore,
We’ll each recall with kindest love
This Class of ’94.

G. W. BECKETT.
Epistle to the Philippians.

Know ye, little Philippians, that it came to pass, at that season of the year when the members of the Faculty do throw dice to see who shall go abroad to study (?), that I, Philippi, did throw the largest number—of Freshmen. In as much as it had been agreed upon that he who could throw the largest number should travel in foreign lands, I went forth, having donned the trappings of a General and adjusted golden spectacles upon my brassy features.

For twelve long months have I been going to and fro in the earth and walking up and down in it; but since ye have been delivered unto me to be persecuted and tormented for a term of four years, I shall soon return and make myself known unto you. In the meantime, peace be with you, for when I come into your midst woe shall be thine! He that knoweth not the art of flattery shall fall by the wayside, but unto him who flattereth and indulgeth in all manner of boot-licking many and great honors shall be bestowed. Yea, verily, the flatterer and boot-licker shall meet their reward.

Ye may pay homage to the King of the Faculty, for he hath certain powers; but know ye that by me Corporals are created and Lieutenants given commissions testifying to their bravery.

Little Philippians, obey your officers and guard well the honor of your commander, for the Emperor of Germany returneth with me and verily much is expected of my soldiers. I have spoken to him often of my Regiments and my Drum Corps, of my Officers and my Privates; but now he comes to see with his eyes that which he has heard; so, soldiers, wear your collars, shoes and other accoutrements and try to put up as good an appearance as possible, for the reputation of your commander is in the balance.

The monarchs of Europe have placed crowns of laurel upon my brow, and have said unto me: “Tarry yet longer in our land, for well do you know that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country.” Often have I rebuked them, saying: “My services are needed in my own land, and if my real worth is not there fully known, it matters not, for conscious of my abilities, I shall return to my people and ever labor to raise them to a true knowledge of my greatness.”

Finally, Philippians, rejoice and be glad, knowing that ye have a leader who willingly casts aside all these honors to serve you.
Years at College.

The Freshman sees life full of hope,
    Ambition holds him in her train;
Examinations make him mope,
    He longs to "rise," but longs in vain.

The Sophomore, with conscious pride,
    On maidens casts his lingering eyes;
He takes the dear ones out to ride,
    His heart soon breaks—lost is his prize.

The Junior works both morn and night—
    He feels the "honor" in his hand;
The "blue list" ruins his prospects bright—
    He's the maddest man in all the land.

The Senior no ambition feels—
    He breaks hearts, his has long been steeled;
He eats each day three happy meals,
    Receives his "dip," and then is "heeled."

The Lawyer with the Fresh stands pat;
    He nothing knows save to cut prayers;
His P. A. coat and old silk hat
    Show that he aims to put on airs.

A. H.
Serenade.

Oh, loveliest maid of Athens town,
As thou art passing on thy way,
Wilt thou not deign a moment's heed
Unto a minstrel's lowly lay?

A rosebud in the garden reigned—
    Sweet heiress of a royal line—
Her wondrous beauty made her queen;
    But then—it was as naught to thine.

A sunbeam fell upon a flower,
    And gilded it by magic wile
With splendor rare, but sadly failed
    To match the beauty of thy smile.

A lily 'neath the wind's caress
    Her chalice swayed in grace divine—
A motion like a melody,
    But then—it was as naught to thine.

The minstrel, too, doth strive in vain
    Thy peerless beauty to express,
But words must fail—they only tell
    A part of all thy loveliness.

H. A. A.
To cram or not to cram—that's the question.
Whether 'tis better for us to "bust,"
The result of lack of study and of ignorance,
Or to take book against impending woe,
And by hard study 'scape it. To cram, to pass,
What more; and by that cramming end for once
The being plucked, and all the painful incidents
Following after. 'Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To cram, to pass,
To pass, perchance to "bust," aye there's the rub.
For in that last "exam" what questions come,
When on one sleepless night we rest our fate,
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes our idleness of so long life;
For who would hand in paper poor prepared,
With half the questions left unanswered,
And run the risk of getting zero; who
Would gird himself to meet the taunts of more Successful fellows in his class; who would
Spurn the thought of parent’s ire o’er money
Wasted, and years illy spent; who would frame
Dull pictures of a lowly life, beset
By ignorance, and bereft of love, but that
The thought that after all the cramming the "bust" may be.
But more complete, makes us endure rather
A "bust" with sleep, than one that comes upon us
With bodily weakness, headache and bleared eyes.
Thus dalliance does make idlers of us all;
And thus the native hue of cramming is
Sicklied over with the pale cast of work;
And thus it is we linger long in College
At each examination badly plucked.

The Unpardonable Sin.

A man once went to work, a great dislike to win.
He thought and thought and then he bought
A parquet seat, the eighteenth in,
    Went out 'twixt acts and came in late;
    By this he won a cordial hate.
This spurred him on, he longed for more.
He worked his brain and once again
Aroused dislike, disgust galore.
    He unto him a loud voice got
    And carefully explained the plot.
Still more of hate did he demand;
    He went his way and one hot day
He asked an apoplectic man
    If it was hot enough for him.
The Cup of hate filled to the brim.
One day he tempted fate too far.
    Beside him sat a graduate,
A maid just 'scaped from Madam's rule.
He asked the ancient question: "Are
    You glad or sorry to leave school?"
It was the fatal straw that broke
    The camel's back. Alas! alack!
The maiden slew him with a look.
    They dug his grave, alack! alas!
    And buried him in a coffin of brass.

The Fatal Firing.

It was drill time on the campus,
And the soldier boys were there;
The first drum long had sounded forth
With quite a martial air.
The Major in his office sat listening to reports
Of the ones that were delinquent,
As they slowly sallied forth.

But soon a loud explosion rang upon the campus calm,
And the Major from his office hurried out in great alarm,
"Quickly scanning all the faces of the noble soldier-boys,
As they slowly sallied forth.

Still the noise remained a mystery,
Though he laid it to a gun
In the hands of some young private
That was brimming o'er with fun.
There were smiles upon the faces of the boys
Who gathered round, but about the guilty private
Not a one did make a sound.

The drill at last was over,
And the Major issues forth,
Commanding all the officers
To see him at his post.
Then he found the grave offender
And he likewise sent for him,
Whom he soundly reprimanded
For making such a din.

"But I did not know t'was loaded,"
Was the answer that he made;
Said he only snapped the trigger
As with the gun he played,
And he then advised the Major
That the guns be all looked o'er,
In case a wandering cartridge
Should be found within the bore.

But the Major he was positive
About this grave offence,
And very strongly hinted that
The youth should wander hence.
Wander from the "Classic" city,
From the Varsity so dear,
Though the Sophomore vainly pleaded
That his innocence was clear.

So from this take a lesson, boys,
And when you get your guns,
Cast your eye into the chamber
As a guard against such fun.
For the firing of a weapon
On the campus is a sin;
So keep your guns quite silent
If your Dip. you wish to win.

A Modern Court Scene.

PRELUDE.

The Athens football team had played a game
That covered them with victory and fame.
Their college mates full well did celebrate
Their feat so glorious, and their conquest great.
But some of them, so lightsome was their joy,
Upon the streets of Athens chanced to toy,
And by some grievous accident no doubt
Her beautiful electric lights knocked out.
This was a crime—at least so thought the Chief,
And o'er it mused the MAYOR in much grief.
The next day saw a sad and sombre sight,
The MAYOR mad, the boys in fearful plight.
He fined them, fast as they might come to view
For what they did, and what they didn't do.
Old Jove was ne'er more powerful than HE
Nor hurled more thunder, even on a spree.
The scene's the court-room, and what there took place,
We faintly try on paper here to trace.

THE MAYOR.

My worthy chief, thou valiant man and tried,
Stand forth, and here in open court proclaim
Who have with boldness our sound laws defied
For this disturbance, who here is to blame.

THE CHIEF.

My honored sire, last evening rather late
My force was roused from sleep by noises great.
It seemed as Bedlam sudden broken out,
We went straight to the spot or thereabout;
A hundred students, bent on mischief, saw,
Without regard for us, or for the law—
Armed to the teeth, we dared not them attack;
Some others, watchers on, were not far back—
These were unarmed—we first did closely scan
And then arrested—Sire, there stands the man!
But he arrested, dared us to molest
By speaking to a friend of his arrest;
This friend did dare some insolent remark
And we arrested him e'en in the dark,
But then the mob perceived us, and we fled
And now have 'gainst them cases made instead.

THE MAYOR.
Well done, my faithful Chief, long may you live
Your pay to draw, your counsel us to give
Who heeds the fight and seeks to run away,
Oft lives to fight or run another day.
Culprit stand forth! What say you to this charge,
This grave offense of being out at large
When my night watchmen should be 'lowed to sleep?
Why should you force them such strict vigil keep?
The very gods look down on you in wrath.
Do you not know that night is made for rest?
That you may better walk your daily path
I'll you of fifty dollars now divest.
And you who dared my soldiers to affront
By words unseeming to their modest ears,
One hundred from your pocket quickly count
Or take a sentence for full twenty years.
And what know YOU of this disgraceful scene
In which MY Majesty and Power both
'Neath ruthless feet have badly trampled been
And slight regarded my official oath?
Nothing! How dare you thus so lightly treat
This act, this riot, this most barefaced CRIME!
Pay five and twenty, little enough I weel
For such dense ignorance in our classic clime.
And ye who stand around, and look as though
Ye think THIS COURT its prestige doesn't know,
Look well, ye give us not the slightest cause
To throw round you the meshes of our laws,
For we are strong and great, and feel our Power
And know how much above you we do tower,
Even now proclaim to us allegiance due
Or feel our mighty, weighty wrath on you.

THE STUDENT BODY IN CHORUS.
Hail, our liege Lord, with humbled hearts we speak,
No more shall Athens see a student's freak;
No more shall we attempt thee any harm;
No more for fun give out false fire alarm;
No more turn darksome night to howling day;
No more in life will we indulge in play.
And by the presence, sentenced by thy look,
Without thy mercy we are quite forsook.
Here on our knees, who never knelt before,
To thee swear fealty; we thee here implore
Let not thy wrath consume us as a fire,
But let sweet charity temper thy just ire.

A. H.
In such a time as this, 'tis strange
   How pain and pleasure meet;
How the mournful strains of sorrow's voice
   Are measured by joyous feet.

We are glad to lay text-books aside for awhile
   And never stand finals again,
But the thoughts of parting with all we've known here
   Can bring with them nothing but pain.

We are glad to quit Campus and old Yahoo,
   To see again "Home, Sweet Home,"
But we hate to leave Athens, and we'll think of her still,
   No matter wherever we roam.

Of the various times in the lives of men,
   There are times when they watch and sleep,
There are times when the world seems happy and gay,
   There are times when they mourn and weep.

But the saddest time one knows in his life,
   And none lived without ever a sigh,
Is when he looks in the face of those whom he loves
   And bids them a last good-bye.

Yes, sad tears will gather in true men's eyes
   When they say farewell to each other,
Whether comrade, shipmate, classmate, or friend,
   Or closer still, a brother.

Tears, whether sprung from sorrow or joy,
   Are manly and noble, not weak.
They are safety valves of hearts surcharged
   With trouble and ready to break.

If you'll watch the foremost fighting rank
   In danger's dark career,
You'll find the hand most daring there
   Has wiped away the tear.

But I stray from my subject, the past seems bright,
   But as sometimes there are spots on the sun;
So those happy days had troubled clouds
   Across their path to run.

How oft has Philippi with loud, trumpet voice,
   Filled our trembling souls with dismay,
As he sent us to board in harsh, scolding tones
   In Col.'s inimitable way?
And "Proty" never stuck to spots in his life,
And has busted us times without end.
We'll forget the busts, but we cannot forget
Dr. Campbell, our ever loved friend.

Professor Hooper's Latin was hard oftentimes
And Professor was sometimes hard too,
But in the future, when thinking of true loved friends,
We'll think, Professor, of you.

There's a name in our Faculty hard to pronounce,
We call him "Charby" you know.
Well, from everything he ever did or said
Sweet memories shall ever flow.

But shall the memory of Harry White die?
Shall the sound of his voice pass away?
This needs no answer, our children shall love
"Old Harry" when we are gray.

The future may bring us many sorrows and joys,
May bring to us wealth or fame,
But whatever it brings amidst it all,
We'll cherish our Chancellor's name.

Mental science, morality, logic may go,
As day shall tread upon day,
Yet his tender words and kindly smile
Shall with us forever stay.

Many stars have shown on our lives as we've passed
To brighten learning's hall to our view,
But of all that have gleamed and twinkled there,
The brightest, Professor Wilcox, was you.

The green leaves of summer will soon turn brown,
'Neath the sultry kiss of the sun;
They'll wither and die and fall to the ground,
And then their race is run.

But the memory of Charlie Strahan's gentle voice,
His ways so calm and serene,
Shall not as summer leaves fade and die,
But with us shall ever be green.

If there is one that lives for whom tender thoughts
We'll carry with us to our grave,
A man whom we love, a man without guile,
That man, I know, is "Old Dave."

'Tis a sad, sad tale, this tale of mine,
A tale I hate to tell;
The tale of how the Seniors fought
And how the Seniors fell.
A gallant band of handsome men,
With hearts as light and gay,
And voices as ringing with brightest hope
As the mocking birds in May,
Was this Senior team, of which I write,
Who entered in the games
With smiles as full of confidence
As the famous Jesse James.

The first game which these Seniors played
Was with the Junior team,
And the conclusion was forced upon them
That "things are not as they seem,"
For it seemed 'twould be an easy thing
To beat them if they'd try,
And that it looked as though they could
I really can't deny,
But somehow when they came to bat,
And thought to lose the "sphere,"
By sending it with one fell stroke
On a journey through the air,
The ball would seem to take on wings
And fly this way and that
And curve all round the batter's legs
And dodge all round his bat,
And laugh aloud in fiendish glee
As it whizzed by very near
And landed in the catcher's mit,
While the Senior fanned the air;
Or else just for the fun of it
Would come by quite demurely
And coax the Senior to strike at it
After taking aim quite surely.
Ah! Then —— with muscles rendered strong
By excitement and by training,

That Senior would make sure his aim,
And every muscle straining,
Draw back and with a murderous gleam
Give the baseball such a rap
As would send it to the left fielder,
Known a "Tar-Bucket" Jim Dunlap.

When in the field, the Seniors thought
That the ball played every antic,
And always stayed just out of reach
Of the Seniors rendered frantic
By seeing Juniors running bases
As though they had all day
With laughing, skipping, hopping, jumping,
Along their merry way.

But the Juniors would become fatigued
Perambulating bases,
And take the outfield to rest awhile,
By reclining in their places.
Thus they played and kicked up dust
On the baseball field's arena
While the sorrowful Seniors growled and cussed
At the score of Hal Moreno.

When the sun was down and the janitor moke
Was lowering Charby's flag,
And those who had money on the Junior team
Were contemplating a jag,
This interesting game was brought to a close
And the Seniors thought 'twas the tricks
Of that villainous ball which lost them the game
On a score of fourteen to six.

The next game played by the Seniors was
With a team of Professors partly,
While the balance of this selected team
Was law class men right smartly.
The ball apparently had become fatigued
For it played its tricks no more,
But still in some unaccountable way
The Seniors lost as before.
And the sorrowful team who lost the game,
All wished that they could find
Some hole which they could crawl into
And pull in the opening behind.
The lawyers won on seven to six,
Which was a very good score,
And when a man has done his best,
Than that he can do no more.

The Sophomore team was the next one,
Which the Seniors were booked to play,
But the first time that they played them,
A thunderstorm spoiled the day.
And so the game was postponed until
The second day after at four,
And again the gallant Senior team
Met the plucky Sophomore,
But as usual the game was a dead sure thing
For the side the Seniors played,
Though everybody lost the count
Of the runs the two sides made.
And when the game was ended
And Moreno announced the score,
The Seniors were found to have made fourteen
And the Sophomores made one more.
Oh! cruel, stern, relentless Fate,
Why treat the Seniors thus?
Why cause them all such sorrow and shame?
Why make them growl and cuss?
And oh, ye implacable scorer,
Who sat so undisturbed
When others were excited
And their angry passions curbed,
Why did you not for charity's sake
Score the Seniors a few more runs,
And instead of making big round O's
Just make some little 1's?

How different then would things have been!
How it would have altered the case!
The Seniors then would not have come out
The last ones in the race.

The Freshman team is a plucky one,
But in spite of all their pluck,
They came out like the Seniors did,
For they played in mighty hard luck.
And when these two unlucky teams
Came to play against each other
Each wished the other team to beat,
And tried their best to bother
Their own men so as to allow the men
Of the opposing team to score,
And thus you see, as a natural thing,
The score grew more and more.

At one time it looked as though
The Seniors could enjoy defeat,
But they did not have quite time enough,
And so they had to beat.

And here the Seniors had to bear
Misfortune with a grin,
For when they really wished to lose
They were obliged to win.

And now, oh kindest reader,
My tale is almost through,
The score was such an enormous one
I'm afraid to tell it to you,
But still, I suppose I have it to do,
As my duty I will not flee,
The Freshman team made nineteen runs
And the Seniors twenty-three.

The Seniors are now a discouraged lot,
For them defeat has no terrors,
For they have gotten used to defeat
In their "Comedy of Errors."

G. W. B.
AN OLD JOKE.

Senior—"Why is Charby like a leopard?"
Junior (at beginning of the college term)—"I don't know."
Senior—"Because he can't change his spots."

DESIGN IN NATURE.

Freshman—"Why did they put that railing around the top of the water-tower?"
Lawyer—"To keep Barrett Phinizy from drinking out of it every morning when he comes down to college."

AN AGNOSTIC.

Frick—"Why is it that a horse can see so much better at night than a man?"
Harris—"I don't know. I'm no optimist."

A MISTAKE CAUSED BY BAD PRONUNCIATION.

Charby—"Mr. Dunlap, what is a volt?"
Dunlap (who has just returned from "up the river," and knows nothing about his lesson)—"A vault is something used in a bank to keep money in."

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Bower (after mispronouncing a proper name)—"Professor, is there any fixed rule for the pronunciation of proper names?"
Prof. Riley—"No sir; you might just as well pronounce your name Bore as Bower."

TOO MUCH LATIN.

Law Professor—"Mr. Upson, is the testimony of a dying man accepted as evidence in the trial of his murderer?"
Steve Upson—"Yes, sir; postmortem testimony is accepted by any court."

NEEDED MORE TIME.

Dr. Boggs—"Mr. McCutchen, what does our author say in regard to the doctrine of Free Will excluding the possibility of foreknowledge and providential direction?"
McCutchen (having time to read only part of first sentence)—"I believe, Doctor, that's where he says: 'It's one thing to ask this question and quite another to answer it.'"

ASKING TOO MUCH OF A SENIOR.

Dr. Boggs—"Mr. Fleming, look into your mind and see if consciousness does not testify to the existence of moral freedom in choice."
Paul Fleming—"Doctor, I have been suffering from my eyes for some time and don't like to tax them."
A BAD MISTAKE.

Professor Morris—(Finding a mistake in an exercise being read by a Freshman)—Mr. Halsey, what have you there?

Malvern Halsey—(Eating candy on rear bench and thinking Professor Morris has noticed it.)—I have some candy, sir.

A DEEP MIND.

Reab—(soliloquizing)—If all cards were blank, what a fine mind trainer whist would be.

GENEROSITY.

They say Henry Hillyer is so generous that when he has no money he goes down to the Y. M. C. A. bowling alley and sets the ten-pins up.

EXPORT.

Pinckney Steiner was the greatest sport in college,
But now they have sent him away,
And his heart is filled with sadness,
For he’s an export now, they say.

A VALID EXCUSE.

Reab, '95, to Prof. McP-r-n.—“Professor, I was up late last night, and in consequence could not study and would like to be excused.”

ONE OF “ZIP’S” JOKES.

“Zip,” to Senior French Class—“If you put a puppy on a block of ice, in what way will it resemble a kiss?”

Puzzled Seniors give it up and “Zip” smilingly says, “It will be dog-on-ice.”

AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

Prof. Johnson—(In Sophomore Latin Class)—“Mr. B., where was Mr. Caesar born?”

To the Public:—I hereby challenge any man, barring Harrington, to play checkers for gate receipts and stakes of a Coca-Cola ticket to 5 cents a side. G. F. HURT.

SOME THINGS YOU HAVE NOTICED, PERHAPS.

Many strange things are to be seen in this world,
If we would only watch out.
We’d find some things so very strange
As to cause a dumb man to shout.
We’d find some boys who would never cut,
And some who would never lie,
And some day we’d find that Homer Black
Lucy Cobb had not passed by.
We’d find Walter Cothran’s legs were straight,
And that Perry Hill was not a sport,
And that Old Bob Draper was not knock-kneed,
And that Gammon’s legs were short. H. G. C.

Our Dime Museum.

"Walk right this way and see the greatest curiosities of the age."

Just to the right you will see Jasper Dorsey, "The Cotton-headed Man from Hall."

In the cage on the opposite side you will see "Big" Smith, "The Man with Long Hair," captured in the swamps of lower Georgia and not yet civilized.

In the next cage you will see "The Putty-faced Irishman," captured in the wilds of Ireland, and brought to this country last fall for the first time.

Mr. Oscar Lyndon, "The Comical Freak," will now entertain you for a few moments, and then Mr. David C. Barrow, 3rd, will give one of his beautiful, artistic drills.

We would now call your attention to Mr. Joe Akerman, "The Fat Boy," and Mr. Snitz Carter, "The Living Skeleton," who sit side by side upon the next platform.

The cage to your right is occupied by "The Dog-face Boy," who is the greatest curiosity on exhibition in America.

Messrs. Jim Dunlap and Bob Ridley will soon give an exhibition upon the next platform and a prize of $50.00 is offered to anyone who can walk like them.

We will now close our little show by giving you a glimpse at "The Prize Beauty of America," Mr. John White Morton, who received by far the largest number of votes for the "Handsomest man at the University of Georgia."
"College Life," by Edwin Davis. In a sparkling manner Mr. Davis relates how he went through college without buying a book, and left Athens every week without permission. He very modestly attributes all of his success to his persuasive abilities. In this work Mr. Davis also treats upon the trials of college life, and 'tis pathetic to read his accounts of how, during the cold nights of winter, he went from house to house looking for "spots" in Physics, Biology and Latin.

"Predestination," by C. Thomson Haskell, 99 vols. Mr. Haskell treats of this subject in quite a voluminous style, which is characteristic of most of his writings, but there are many novel expressions in this work which commend it to the public. His highly imaginative mind is given full scope in the discussion of the subject, and his arguments are convincing.

"Skirt Dances, Artistic Drills, etc." This is the title of a splendidly written book by Messrs. Bacon, Armstrong and Barrow. We heartily recommend it to all parties wishing to get up amateur performances.

"Civilization in the South Sea Islands; or Why Little Willie was Killed." Price, one dime. Extracts from this very exciting and blood-curdling novel were read by the author, Mr. McGregor, before the members of the Senior Class last winter, and, it is needless to say, were very much enjoyed. Mr. McGregor has treated of this subject in his earnest, logical style and produced a novel which is sure to rank among the greatest works of the kind ever published.

"An Explanation; or Why I Entered the Sophomore Class," by R. D. Draper. Mr. Draper proves conclusively that he did not petition the Faculty to let him enter the Sophomore Class for fear he could not stand the Freshman finals, but because he didn't want to be in the same class with Oscar Lyndon.

"Why I Love Jesse," by "Big" Smith. This is a very pathetic and touching love story, in which the little disagreements common to all love affairs are beautifully described. Mr. Smith ends his beautiful little novel thus: "In the words of the Immortal Jesse, P-O-O-H!"
Knowing the interest that was taken in the statistics published in last year's Pandora, the present Board of Editors has again given the students of the University an opportunity to express their opinions upon questions of particular interest to University men. In doing so, we have given up much time in order to give to our readers accurate results of the voting as conducted among the students of the University of Georgia.

We find that the average Senior is 6 months younger this year than last; his height is exactly the same and he weighs one pound more than last year's average Senior. The average Junior is one year younger; his height is the same, but he weighs 5 pounds more than the average Junior last year. The average Sophomore is one year younger; he has grown one-quarter of an inch and weighs 5 pounds more. The Freshman is six months younger; his height is one inch less than last year, but his weight is the same.

In the vote for the most intellectual student in college, Johnson came first; Yow, second and H. Bacon, third.

J. W. Morton received the largest number of votes for the handsomest student in college; Henry Brown second, and George Butler, third.

Paul Fleming is considered the most popular student at the University; Joe Akerman, second and Henry Brown, third.

Scott is the favorite author.

Gladstone is the favorite public character; Crisp, second and Cleveland, third.

Evans is the favorite candidate for Governor, but Atkinson has many staunch supporters among the students of the University and the voting was very close.

More interest seems to have been taken in the contest for the most popular professor than in any of the others, and, after compiling the statistics, we find that the students have decided that Professor Barrow is the most popular professor in the University of Georgia; Professor Hooper second, and Dr. Herty, third. Professors Morris, Charbonnier, Strahan and McPherson also received several votes.

Senior Class.

The average age of the Seniors is 20 years and 4 months; height, 5 feet, 9½ inches; weight, 149 pounds. Professor Hooper received the largest number of votes for the most popular professor, with Professor Barrow a close second.

Paul Fleming received the largest number of votes for the most popular student in college; Akerman, second and Black, third.
Johnson is considered the most intellectual student in college by the members of this class; Yow, second and Moreno, third.

Henry Brown received the largest number of votes for the handsomest student in college; Alexander, second and J. W. Morton, third.

In the vote for the most popular student in the Senior Class, Paul Fleming came first; Akerman, second and Brown, third.

Yow received the largest number of votes for the most intellectual student in the Senior Class and Bacon came second.

There seemed to be so many handsome men in the Senior Class that it was difficult for them to decide just who was the handsomest, but Brown received the largest number of votes, and Butler, Fleming and Harrington tied for second place.

We find among the Seniors 4 Presbyterians, 3 Baptists, 2 Methodists, 2 Christians, 1 Hebrew and 14 members of no church at all.

The Seniors, after four years of experience, decide unanimously that Saturday recitations should be abolished, and but one Senior believes in compulsory chapel.

Shakespeare is their favorite author.

Evans received four more votes for Governor than Atkinson.

Gladstone seems to be the Seniors' favorite public character; Crisp, second and Cleveland, third.

Judging from the statistics, we are led to believe that the Seniors keep their lamps burning late at night, but seldom see the sun-rise.

The Seniors believe that athletic sports help the mind as well as the body and are unanimous in their support of college athletics.

Fourteen play football, thirteen play baseball and nine play tennis. Seven Seniors subscribe to the Red and Black and ten to the Magazine.

JUNIOR CLASS.

The members of this class average 19 years in age; 5 feet 91/4 inches in height and 146 pounds in weight.

The Juniors rise at 7:35 a.m. and only sit up long enough at night to prepare their lessons for the next day, retiring at 11:10 p.m.

The Juniors voted Professor Barrow the most popular professor in the University, and Professors Hooper and Herty tied for second place.

With the members of this class, Paul Fleming is considered the most popular student in college; Brown, second and Fricks, third.

Brown is considered the handsomest student in college by the members of this class; J. W. Morton, second and George Butler and Hansell, third.

Johnson is considered the most intellectual student in college by the Juniors; Yow, second and George Butler and Bacon, third.

Black received 13 votes for the most popular student in this class and Halsey 5.

Harris received 17 votes for the most intellectual Junior and Guvton 4.
J. W. Morton received the largest number of votes for the handsomest student in his class and Murphy second.
Nine Juniors are members of no church: 5 are Methodists;
4 Presbyterians, 3 Baptists, 2 Episcopalians and 1 Lutheran.
Two Juniors believe in Saturday Recitations and four in compulsory chapel.
Scott is their favorite author.
Atkinson received one more vote than Evans in this class for Governor.
Cleveland is the favorite public character and Gladstone next.
All the Juniors agree that the University needs money more than anything else.
All the Juniors favor athletics. One-third play football, one-half baseball, and two-thirds tennis.
Thirteen subscribe to Red and Black and eleven to the Magazine.

SOPHOMORE CLASS.

We have found the average Sophomore to be a man of the age of 18 years; his height is 5 feet 9 inches and he weighs 146. He rises just in time for breakfast at 7:50 and retires at 11:10.
This Sophomore believes that Professor Barrow is the most popular professor, with a smaller part of his love given to Professor Herty.
Paul Fleming, Moreno and Brown are the most popular men in college.
Ezelle was voted the most popular man in the class, with Bacon second.

Johnson, H. Bacon and Yow are the most intellectual men in college, if the Sophomore's word is to be believed.
The class unites upon Holcomb Bacon as the most intellectual man among them.
It was hard for the class to decide upon the handsomest man in college, but J. W. Morton, Brown and Murphy are the handsomest according to the voting.
A. Morton, Hansell and Ezelle are the ideals of manly beauty of the Sophomore Class.
Strange to say, one-half of the class are not members of a church, but this is to be accounted for by reason of their youth. The remainder are members of the Presbyterian,
Baptist, Episcopal, Methodist and Catholic churches.
Four of these Sophomores believe in Saturday recitations and in compulsory chapel.
Scott and Dickens are the favorite authors of the men of this class.
If the Sophomores elected the Governor, Evans would beat
Atkinson by just seven votes.
Speaker Crisp is the favorite public character of this class,
with Gladstone and Cleveland a tie for a close second.
They are unanimous in believing that the greatest need of the University is money. They are also unanimous in not being opposed to college athletics. One-third of the class play football, nearly one-half play baseball and almost two-thirds of them play tennis.
The college papers are received by about one-half of the class.
FRESHMAN CLASS.

The average age of the Freshman is 17 years, 6 months; height, 5 feet, 7\(\frac{1}{2}\) inches, and weight 134.

In this class Professor Barrow received 22 votes for the most popular professor; Professor Hooper 5, and Dr. McPherson 1.

Paul Fleming received by far the largest number of votes for the most popular student in college, and Akerman and Black tied for second place.

Yow is considered the most intellectual student in college by the members of this class; Johnson, second and H. Bacon, third.

George Butler received the largest number of votes for the handsomest student; J. W. Morton and Murphey tied for second place and Hansell came third.

Boland is considered the most popular student in his class; Cothran, second and Burton Davis, third.

In the vote for the most intellectual student in the Freshman class, Cothran received 17 votes; Jackson 4 and about ten tied for third place.

Davis received the largest number of votes for the handsomest student in the Freshman class and Ferrell came second.

There are, in this class, 6 Methodists, 3 Presbyterians, 2 Baptists, 2 Episcopalians, 2 Catholics and 2 Hebrews.

Two Freshmen believe in Saturday recitations and in compulsory chapel.

Dickens and Shakespeare are their favorite authors.

Evans received 17 votes for Governor and Atkinson 7.

Gladstone is their favorite public character, but the Freshmen also admire Crisp and Cleveland.

The members of this class rise at 7:35 in the morning and retire at 10:45 at night.

The Freshmen agree that money is the greatest need of the University, but some of them complain awfully of the hard benches in the recitation rooms.

None of the Freshmen are opposed to Athletics; one-fourth play foot-ball, one-half base-ball and one-half tennis.

Twenty-one subscribe to Red and Black and nine to Magazine.
Conclusion.

After concluding our work on Volume VII. of the PANDORA, we wish to thank those who have aided us in making this issue a success, and to make a few suggestions to the succeeding board.

It would be impracticable to mention all those who have aided us by contributing to the literary and artistic departments. In fact some, from extreme modesty, have requested us not to mention their names; so we take this means of thanking all who have helped us.

We believe that the prosperity of a college is greatly advanced by a good annual, and, after the past year's experience in preparing Volume VII. of the PANDORA, we are led to believe that the assistance and coöperation of the Board of Trustees would not only enable the students to publish a much handsomer annual, but would also be of great benefit to the University.

We again wish to urge upon the Fraternities the necessity of electing the Board of Editors early in the fall, for it is impossible for the editors to do justice to both their studies and the PANDORA in the short time allowed them in the past for work on their annual. We would suggest, as did last year's editor, that the Board of Editors be elected before the summer vacation.

We wish to thank the Franklin Publishing Company not only for their splendid work, but also for kindness shown us upon all occasions.

Offering any assistance in our power to next year's Board, we are, Very respectfully, THE EDITORS.

SAVE MONEY.
We Sell Everything at Retail at Wholesale Prices.

IMPORTED BRUSHES.

Nowhere in Atlanta can you see such a stock and variety of Brushes as with us. Some people on first coming into the Store have asked us whether we kept anything else but Brushes? We do, however, as you well know. You can buy a Hair Brush of us from 25c. to $5.00, and at whatever price you decide to pay, you will obtain for the money a much better brush than elsewhere. We import Tooth Brushes in lots of five thousand. The best ones we sell have our name on them, and we get 25c., 35c. and 50c. for them. If a bristle comes out in three months after you buy one, you can return it and either get your money returned or a new brush. From this price they run down to 5c. Our 15c. Brush is what you are generally asked 25c. for.

HAIR BRUSHES.—To mention an article of this kind in an advertisement is very unsatisfactory. Hair Brushes with Mr. Jacobs is a sort of hobby. Unless you have seen his stock of these goods, you cannot know what a stack of Hair Brushes is. He has Brushes from 25c. to $5.00. No one knows, who has not at some time or other owned one of these good Hair Brushes (by this we do not mean necessarily a $5.00 one, but a brush, say, from $1.25 up), what a positive luxury a good Brush is. A good Hair Brush is worth all the hair tonics we will shortly enumerate, not even excepting Jacobs’ Quinine and Rum Hair Tonic. It will do more to take away a nervous headache; it will do more to keep the dandruff out; and it will do more to keep you from getting bald and gray than all other things.

A good Hair Brush is not only a luxury and an ornament to a room, but is also cheaper in the long run than bad ones, as it will last for at least ten years if taken care of.

That catches the girls at least half a mile.

Clothing and Furnishing Goods

for

Men and Boys, Ready Made and Made to Measure.

In the Department for Clothing to order will be found, in addition to a full line of seasonable goods, all the year round weights in all qualities, with a wide range of price, thereby giving the fullest opportunity for selection.

The particular care exercised by us in the cut, manufacture and novelty of pattern in our Men's Ready Made Stock is also extended to our Clothing for Boys and Children, and guarantees exclusive style and the best of value at no higher prices than are frequently asked for garments made in large wholesale lots and of inferior workmanship.

Our Furnishing Goods embrace a most complete assortment of articles in that line for Boys as well as Men; Underwear, Hosiery, Gloves, and Neckwear in original shapes and colorings imported by us from leading London manufacturers—also Lounging Jackets, Waterproof Coats, etc.

In this Department we have added a new line of leather and wicker goods, including Luncheon Baskets, Holster Cases, Sheffield Plate Flasks, Riding Whips, Crops, Dog Canes and Golf Sticks.

Catalogue, Samples and Rules for Self-Measurement sent on application.
