What is the state of credit-bearing course offerings at your library?

Credit-bearing course are defined as courses where the librarian is a _teacher of record_ and the course addresses _some or all_ of the research skills described in ACRL’s/Information Literacy Competency Standards/ (2000) or draft revised standards (2014). The course need not be formally designated as an Information Literacy or “library research” course.

Has your library ever moved a formerly online librarian-taught, credit-bearing IL credit course to a face-to-face format?

- O Yes
- O No
- O I’m not sure
[Block 1: asked of respondents who answered “We currently offer credit courses” above ]:

The remaining survey questions address librarian-taught, credit-bearing IL courses taught in the 2013/14 academic year.

We are interested in 3 types of credit-bearing information literacy courses:

1) Courses taught by librarians as teachers of record and offered through the library - e.g. "LIBR 101 - Information Literacy"

2) Courses taught or co-taught by librarians as teachers of record in another academic department outside the library - e.g. "MUS 396 – Music Research"

3) Courses taught by librarians as teachers of record as part of an institution-wide program - e.g. STU 110 - "First Year Experience Seminar"

In 2013/14, were courses offered by librarians as teachers of record for credit-bearing IL courses offered through the library- (e.g. LIBR 101)?

O Yes (Please indicate the number of courses [not course sections] in the box below.)
