Sponsored by the non-profit Georgia River Network, Paddle Georgia aims to connect participants of ranging ages and experience with the river. Five CED graduate students, led by Associate Professor Brian LaHaie are participating in the event as the beginning of a thru-session class, informally titled “Paddle Georgia.” They will attempt to view the river through a “series of different lenses,” said LaHaie, spending their time mapping and recording their trip — and possibly setting a precedent for future projects. To read the full Red & Black article, click on the “for more information” button below.